How to use this pack

This is a working tool, not a book to read once. There are 100 numbered prompts across ten parts, covering the entire life of an interior design project — from the first enquiry to the handover thank-you. Each prompt has a 'Use when' line telling you exactly when it earns its place, and most end with a tip from the studio floor.

Every prompt is written to be pasted straight into ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini or any modern assistant. Fill in the square brackets with your details, run it, then edit the result in your own voice before it reaches a client. Appendix A has a Master Context block you paste once and reuse for the whole project.

One rule runs through the whole pack: AI drafts, you design. No prompt here asks the AI to invent a price, a brand, a statistic or a client quote. Where a fact is needed, the prompt tells the AI to leave a placeholder instead — and Appendix E is the checklist you run before anything goes out.

The ten parts

Part	Title	Prompts
1	Enquiry and First Reply	1-10
2	Client Discovery and Brief	11-20
3	Concept and Mood Boards	21-30
4	Proposals and Quotations	31-40
5	Pricing, Fees and Negotiation	41-50
6	Execution and Vendor Coordination	51-60
7	Instagram and Content Engine	61-72
8	Reviews, Referrals and Repeat Business	73-80
9	Business, Money and Team	81-90
10	Client Care and Difficult Conversations	91-100
A-F	Six appendices: Master Context, the market, GST/TDS, AI tools, verification, 30-day plan	—

PART 1 OF 10

Enquiry and First Reply

The first reply decides the project. These ten prompts get you answering in minutes, qualifying politely, and never dropping a lead — in English or Hinglish.

01. The 60-second first reply

Use when: a new enquiry lands on WhatsApp, a missed call or a website form and you want to reply before they message three more designers.

> You are the studio manager for [STUDIO NAME], an interior design practice in [CITY]. A new enquiry just arrived. Write a warm WhatsApp reply under 90 words that: (1) thanks the client by name, (2) says we would love to help with their [2BHK/3BHK/villa/office] in [AREA], (3) asks three quick qualifying questions — possession date, approximate budget, and whether they want design-only or turnkey execution, (4) offers a free 15-minute call today or tomorrow. Keep it friendly, Indian, and free of jargon. Do not quote any price yet.

Tip: reply within 5 minutes where you can — speed is the single biggest edge a small studio has over a big brand.

02. The Instagram DM handoff

Use when: an enquiry comes in as an Instagram DM or a comment and you want to move it to WhatsApp without losing the thread.

> Write a two-message Instagram DM sequence for [STUDIO NAME] replying to a lead who messaged about interiors for their [home/office] in [CITY]. Message 1 (under 60 words): thank them, show interest, and ask for their requirement in one line. Message 2 (sent after they reply): move the conversation to WhatsApp with a polite, non-pushy line and give the number [WHATSAPP NUMBER]. Tone: friendly, human, no sales pressure, no emojis in every line.

Tip: never dump a price list in the first DM. Your goal in DM one is only to get the WhatsApp conversation started.

03. The 'kitna lagega?' answer

Use when: the first thing a client asks is the price and you do not yet know the scope.

> A client on WhatsApp asked 'kitna lagega?' for their [2BHK/3BHK] in [CITY] with no other detail. Write a reply under 110 words that is honest and helpful: explain that interior cost depends mainly on scope, finish level and area, give a genuine indicative range per square foot for a mid-range finish in [CITY] ONLY IF the user supplies it (otherwise say 'our typical range depends on scope'), ask for the carpet area and a few photos or a floor plan, and offer a free consultation to give an accurate estimate. Never invent a per-square-foot rate.

Tip: an honest range plus a question beats a made-up number. It also filters out time-wasters.

04. The Hinglish reply

Use when: the client is clearly more comfortable in Hinglish and a pure-English reply feels stiff.

> Rewrite this client message and my reply in natural, respectful Hinglish (Hindi in Roman script mixed with English words, the way urban India actually texts). Keep it warm and professional — no slang, no jokes. My reply should thank them, ask for the flat size and possession date, and offer a call. Client message: '[CLIENT MESSAGE]'. My English draft: '[YOUR DRAFT]'. Return only the Hinglish version, under 100 words.

Tip: match the client's language. A Hinglish reply often gets a reply when English gets silence.

05. Qualify before you quote

Use when: you want the full picture before spending hours on a proposal.

> Write a short qualifying message for an interior design enquiry from [CLIENT NAME] for their [PROPERTY TYPE] in [CITY]. Ask, in a numbered list, for exactly these six things: (1) possession/handover date, (2) carpet area in sq ft, (3) rooms to be done, (4) budget range they have in mind, (5) design-only or turnkey, (6) their preferred style. Keep the whole message under 120 words, friendly and easy to answer on WhatsApp.

Tip: a client who answers these six questions is a real lead. One who will not is usually shopping for free ideas.

06. The scope question (2BHK vs 3BHK vs villa)

Use when: you need to understand how big the job really is.

> A client wants interiors for a [2BHK/3BHK/villa/duplex] of about [AREA] sq ft in [CITY]. Write a reply that explains, in simple words, how the scope changes with size: number of rooms, modular kitchen and wardrobes, false ceiling, lighting, and civil work. Then ask which rooms are non-negotiable and which can be done later. Under 130 words. Do not invent prices.

Tip: 'which rooms are must-do now' converts a vague enquiry into a clear first phase.

07. The 'we are comparing three designers' reply

Use when: a client tells you they are talking to other studios.

> Write a confident, non-defensive WhatsApp reply to a client who says they are comparing three interior designers. Under 120 words. Thank them for the honesty, say that is smart, and explain in three short points what to compare: (1) whether the quote is design-only or includes execution, (2) what happens if the budget changes mid-project, (3) who supervises the site. Offer to send a one-page comparison so they can judge fairly. No badmouthing competitors.

Tip: teaching a client how to compare fairly almost always works in the studio's favour.

08. The builder or developer tie-up reply

Use when: a builder, broker or developer reaches out about a bulk or project channel.

> Write a professional reply to a [builder/developer/broker] in [CITY] who wants to explore a tie-up for interior packages on their [PROJECT NAME]. Under 140 words. Thank them, show interest, and propose a 20-minute call. Ask three questions: how many units, the handover timeline, and whether they want a fixed standard package or a per-unit custom option. Keep the tone corporate and confident.

Tip: project-channel work is repeatable and low-cost to win. Treat every builder reply like it could become a 20-flat order.

09. The referral thank-you reply

Use when: an existing client or contact refers a new lead to you.

> Write a WhatsApp message to [REFERRER NAME] thanking them for referring [NEW CLIENT NAME] to [STUDIO NAME]. Under 70 words. Warm and specific, and tell them you will look after the new client well. Then write a second, separate first-contact message to the new client that mentions who referred them. Friendly, no over-promising.

Tip: always tell the referrer how it went. People refer again when they see it mattered.

10. The 48-hour second follow-up

Use when: you sent a first reply and heard nothing back.

> Write a gentle second follow-up WhatsApp message to [CLIENT NAME] who enquired about interiors for their [HOME/OFFICE] in [CITY] and has not replied in two days. Under 70 words. Do not guilt them. Add one small piece of value — offer to share two relevant project photos, or a two-line tip about planning the modular kitchen first. End with an easy yes/no question.

Tip: most leads are lost to silence, not to 'no'. One polite nudge two days later recovers a surprising number.

PART 2 OF 10

Client Discovery and Brief

A good brief prevents a bad project. These prompts turn a chatty first meeting into a structured brief you can design against — and defend later.

11. The onboarding questionnaire

Use when: a client has agreed to work with you and you need everything in writing.

> Create a one-page client onboarding questionnaire for an interior design project in India. Sections: project basics (address, property type, area, possession date), rooms in scope, budget range, decision-makers, timeline, style preferences, and practical constraints (renting rules, society timings, Vastu requirements if any). Use simple English, WhatsApp-friendly, with a short 'why we ask' note next to the budget question. Keep it to one page.

Tip: send it as a form, not a chat. Written answers stop 'I never said that' arguments later.

12. Lifestyle and persona mapping

Use when: you want to design for how the family actually lives, not for a Pinterest board.

> Interview a client family for an interior project. Write 12 friendly questions that uncover how they really use their home: who cooks and how often, whether they host guests, work from home, have young children or elders, pets, how much storage they need, and their daily routine. For each question add a one-line note on what the answer tells you about the design. Simple English, no design jargon.

Tip: 'how do you spend a Sunday' reveals more about storage and layout than any style quiz.

13. The budget reality-check

Use when: a client's wish list is clearly bigger than their budget and you need to have the honest talk early.

> A client wants a [2BHK/3BHK] interior in [CITY] with [LIST THEIR WISHES] and has a budget of [BUDGET]. Write a polite, honest message that: explains the gap between the wish list and the budget without embarrassing them, offers three ways forward (do fewer rooms now, choose a more economical finish, or phase the work over 12 months), and reassures them that a smaller well-executed project beats a rushed big one. Under 160 words. Do not invent prices.

Tip: have the budget talk before the design, not after the quote. It saves the relationship.

14. The style preference interview

Use when: a client says 'you decide' but you still need a direction they will approve.

> Write 10 simple questions that help an interior client discover their own style, using Indian and global reference points (Jaipur modern, minimal, contemporary, traditional, industrial, coastal). For each question give two options the client can pick between, and end with a short note on how to read their answers into a style direction. Plain English, WhatsApp-friendly.

Tip: 'pick between these two' gets a real answer where 'what is your style?' gets a shrug.

15. Room-priority and must-have list

Use when: you need to agree what gets done first.

> For an interior project covering [ROOMS], create a prioritisation worksheet. List every likely task (modular kitchen, wardrobes, false ceiling, lighting, painting, civil work, furniture, decor, bathroom, balcony). Ask the client to mark each as Must-do now, Can wait, or Not needed. Add a short note on which items are easiest to add later and which are painful to retrofit. One page, simple English.

Tip: retrofitting electricals and false ceiling later is expensive. Front-load those if you can.

16. The expectation alignment sheet

Use when: you want to set the rules of the relationship before design begins.

> Write a one-page 'how we will work together' sheet for an interior design client. Cover: how many design revisions are included, how approvals happen, how changes are billed, how long we take to reply, what we need from the client, and what the client can expect from us. Warm, clear, no legal jargon. End with a signature line for both sides.

Tip: agreeing the revision count up front prevents the endless-revision trap that kills studio margins.

17. Site survey and measurement checklist

Use when: you are visiting a site for the first time.

> Create a site survey checklist for an Indian residential interior project. Include: room-by-room measurements, ceiling height, beam and column positions, door and window openings, electrical points and meter location, plumbing points, dampness or seepage signs, natural light direction, and society rules (working hours, lift use, dust rules). Add a short note on what to photograph. One page, printable.

Tip: photograph every wall and the meter box. You will thank yourself during electrical planning.

18. The phased plan pitch

Use when: the client loves the design but cannot fund it all at once.

> A client cannot do the full interior now. Write a phased plan for a [2BHK/3BHK] in [CITY] across three phases over 12 months: Phase 1 (kitchen and one wardrobe), Phase 2 (living and bedrooms), Phase 3 (decor, lighting, balcony). For each phase give a one-line rationale, and explain why this order saves money. Under 180 words. Do not invent prices.

Tip: phasing keeps the client with you instead of losing them to a cheaper studio for a rushed job.

19. Family decision-maker mapping

Use when: the person talking to you is not the person who signs the cheque.

> For an interior project, write a short guide on mapping the decision-makers. Ask: who owns the home, who is paying, who has the strongest opinion on style, and who will live there day to day. Then write a one-paragraph note on how to keep every decision-maker aligned — for example, sending one shared WhatsApp group and a single approval document. Simple English, practical.

Tip: the fastest way to lose a project is to win over the wrong person in the family.

20. The 24-hour recap message

Use when: you have finished the first consultation and want the brief on record.

> Write a WhatsApp recap message to [CLIENT NAME] after a first consultation for their [PROPERTY] in [CITY]. Under 150 words. Summarise in bullets what you understood: scope, budget range, timeline, style direction and any constraints. End by asking them to confirm or correct anything. Warm and professional.

Tip: a recap that the client confirms becomes the scope of work. It quietly prevents 90 percent of disputes.

PART 3 OF 10

Concept and Mood Boards

Concept work is where AI saves the most hours — and where it can embarrass you fastest. Every prompt here carries the honesty rule: AI drafts, you design and verify.

21. The concept note

Use when: you need to put your design idea into words for the client.

> Write a design concept note for an interior project: a [2BHK/3BHK/villa] in [CITY] for a [family/couple/professional] who wants [STYLE] with a feel of [MOOD]. Structure: the design philosophy in 3 sentences, the spatial idea, the material and colour approach, the lighting approach, and how it meets the client's needs. 350 to 450 words, warm and confident, no jargon. Do not claim specific brands or products.

Tip: the concept note is what makes a client feel you understood them. Write it in their words, not yours.

22. Mood board brief for one room

Use when: you are building a mood board and want a clear written direction first.

> Write a mood board brief for the [ROOM NAME] of a [STYLE] home in [CITY]. Include: the mood in one line, a colour palette of 5 colours with names, 6 to 8 materials and textures (for example terrazzo, cane, teak veneer, linen, brass, matte laminate), a lighting mood, and 3 do-not-use notes. Then give me a short paragraph I can send the client explaining the direction in plain English.

Tip: always state the do-not-use list. It stops the mood board drifting into a Pinterest collage.

23. Colour palette builder

Use when: you want a palette you can actually specify and defend.

> Create a colour palette for the [ROOM] of a home in [CITY] with a [STYLE] direction and [LIGHT: good natural light / low light / north-facing]. Give: a base colour, a secondary colour, an accent, a neutral and a trim colour, each with a plain-English name and a one-line note on where to use it (walls, ceiling, cabinetry, upholstery). Then list three common colour mistakes to avoid in Indian homes with strong sunlight.

Tip: check every paint shade under the room's real light. Indian afternoon light shifts warm neutrals fast.

24. Material and finish schedule

Use when: you are preparing a specification the vendor and client can both follow.

> Draft a material and finish schedule for an interior project in [CITY]. Columns: element (flooring, walls, ceiling, kitchen shutters, wardrobe, countertop, backsplash, hardware), recommended material and finish, where it is used, durability note, and maintenance note. Use materials common in India. Keep it to one table. Do not quote prices or brand names — use material types only.

Tip: pair every premium finish with a durable one. That is how a home stays beautiful after two monsoons.

25. Room-by-room concept brief

Use when: you want one consistent concept applied across every room.

> For a [2BHK/3BHK] in [CITY] with an overall concept of [CONCEPT], write a short concept brief for each room: living, kitchen, master bedroom, second bedroom, and balcony. For each, give: the room's role, one design idea, the key material, the lighting approach, and one storage solution. About 60 words per room. Keep the concept consistent but let each room have its own character.

Tip: give each room one hero idea. Homes with too many ideas feel like showrooms, not homes.

26. Lighting design brief

Use when: you want a lighting plan the electrician can actually execute.

> Write a lighting design brief for an interior project in [CITY]. Cover: ambient, task and accent lighting; where to use false ceiling versus surface fixtures; the colour temperature for each room; dimming; and cove lighting. Add a note on the common mistake of over-lighting small Indian homes. End with a simple room-by-room checklist the electrician can follow. No brand names.

Tip: plan lighting before the false ceiling goes up. Retrofitting it later means breaking the ceiling.

27. Image-tool prompt: living room render

Use when: you want a visual reference in Midjourney, Krea, or any image tool to show a direction.

> Write a detailed image-generation prompt for a photorealistic interior render of a [STYLE] living room in an Indian apartment. Specify: camera angle and lens, room size feel, colour palette, key furniture, materials, lighting (time of day), a large window with soft daylight, plants, and Indian touches like a brass lamp or a dhurrie. Add 'photorealistic, architectural photography, 4k, no text, no watermark'. Give one main prompt and one variation with a different palette.

Tip: use renders as a conversation starter, never as a promise. Label them 'indicative' to the client.

28. Image-tool prompt: modular kitchen

Use when: you need to show a kitchen direction quickly.

> Write an image-generation prompt for a photorealistic render of a modular kitchen for an Indian home in [CITY]. Specify: layout (L-shape/parallel/U-shape), shutter finish and colour, countertop material, backsplash, handle style, under-cabinet lighting, a chimney, and a window with daylight. Add 'photorealistic interior render, architectural photography, 4k, no text, no watermark'. Then give one variation for a compact kitchen under 60 sq ft.

Tip: keep the work triangle (sink, hob, fridge) in every kitchen render you show — clients notice good function.

29. Image-tool prompt: bedroom and kids' room

Use when: you want bedroom directions for adults and children.

> Write two image-generation prompts. Prompt A: a photorealistic render of a [STYLE] master bedroom for an Indian home, with a bed, side tables, a wardrobe, warm layered lighting, and a soft palette. Prompt B: a safe, practical kids' room for a [age]-year-old, with a study nook, storage, and durable finishes. Both: 'photorealistic interior render, architectural photography, 4k, no text, no watermark'. Keep furniture proportions realistic for Indian apartment sizes.

Tip: for kids' rooms, show safe, rounded furniture and easy-clean finishes — parents notice both.

30. The before and after caption

Use when: you have a finished project and want to present the transformation.

> Write a before/after caption for a completed interior project in [CITY] — a [2BHK/3BHK] that went from [BEFORE] to [AFTER]. Give: a punchy one-line hook, a 60-word story about the client's need and your solution, and three takeaways for homeowners. Then write a shorter version under 40 words for Instagram, and a one-line version for a WhatsApp status. Do not invent statistics or client quotes.

Tip: describe the problem the client had, not just the pretty result. Problems sell.

PART 4 OF 10

Proposals and Quotations

A proposal is a selling document, not a spreadsheet. These prompts help you present a clear, GST-correct quote that justifies your fee and protects your margin.

31. The proposal skeleton

Use when: you are writing a full proposal for a serious client.

> Write an interior design proposal for [CLIENT NAME] for their [PROPERTY] in [CITY]. Sections: (1) your understanding of the brief, (2) the design approach, (3) scope and deliverables, (4) what is not included, (5) timeline and stages, (6) investment summary (leave placeholders, do not invent numbers), (7) why [STUDIO NAME], (8) next steps and acceptance. 600 to 800 words, confident and clear. Indian context, simple English.

Tip: 'what is not included' protects you more than any other section. Never skip it.

32. Three-tier packages

Use when: you want the client to choose between options instead of deciding yes or no.

> Create three interior design packages for a [2BHK/3BHK] in [CITY]: Essential, Signature, and Bespoke. For each, list what is included (design scope, drawings, 3D views, site visits, execution support), the level of finish, and the ideal client. Explain in one line how each tier differs. Leave all prices as [PLACEHOLDER]. Simple English, presentable as a client-facing table.

Tip: most clients pick the middle tier. Design it to be the one you most want to sell.

33. Per-sq-ft versus lump-sum framing

Use when: the client is confused about how design fees work.

> Explain, in simple English for an Indian client, the three common ways interior design fees are charged: percentage of project cost, per square foot, and a flat package fee. For each, give when it suits the client and when it suits the studio, and one example of how it feels on a typical project. End with a short recommendation on which model to use for a [PROPERTY TYPE] in [CITY]. Do not invent rates.

Tip: being transparent about your fee model builds more trust than a mysterious lump sum.

34. The BOQ structure

Use when: you need a clean bill of quantities the client and vendor can both read.

> Create a bill of quantities (BOQ) template for an interior project in [CITY]. Columns: item number, room, description, unit (sq ft / running ft / number), quantity, rate, amount, and remarks. Group by room and then by category (civil, carpentry, electrical, painting, furnishing, decor). Add a subtotal row, a note on GST, and a note on exclusions. Leave rates blank. One clean table, Indian formatting.

Tip: keep quantities and rates on the same line. It makes negotiation honest and quick.

35. Inclusions and exclusions clause

Use when: you want to close the biggest gap that causes disputes.

> Write a clear inclusions and exclusions section for an interior design and execution proposal in India. Inclusions: design drawings, 3D views, site supervision, material selection help, and execution as per the agreed BOQ. Exclusions: civil structural changes, plumbing and electrical rewiring beyond scope, loose furniture and appliances, society charges, and any item not listed in the BOQ. Write it in plain English, not legalese, and end with a one-line note that changes are billed as a variation.

Tip: a client who reads your exclusions and still signs is a client who will not argue later.

36. The GST-correct quote note

Use when: you are preparing a quote for a registered business or a client who wants GST shown.

> Write a short note explaining how GST applies to interior design work in India, for a client-facing proposal. Explain: pure design and consultancy attracts 18% GST (the specialty design service classification, SAC 998391); a turnkey project where you also supply and install materials is a works contract under SAC 9954, also generally 18%; and the place of supply matters for interstate projects. Keep it factual and short, and add a line telling the client to confirm with their accountant. Do not invent figures beyond the standard rate.

Tip: put the tax line in the quote, not at the bottom in tiny print. Surprises sour deals.

37. Payment milestone schedule

Use when: you want cash to come in as the work progresses.

> Create a payment milestone schedule for an interior design and execution project in India. Suggest a sensible split (for example: booking advance, design sign-off, material procurement, mid-execution, and final handover), with the percentage for each stage and a one-line trigger for each payment. Add a short note on why milestones protect both sides, and a line on what happens if the client delays a payment. Present as a simple table.

Tip: tie every payment to a deliverable, not to a date. Deliverables are harder to argue with.

38. The 'why us' section

Use when: your proposal needs to justify why you, not the studio next door.

> Write a persuasive 'why [STUDIO NAME]' section for an interior design proposal in [CITY]. Base it on: our process, our on-time record, our site supervision, our after-handover support, and our local knowledge of [CITY] homes. Use three short paragraphs, warm and confident. Do not invent awards, years of experience, or client numbers — use [PLACEHOLDER] where a specific fact is needed.

Tip: never invent credentials. Clients check, and one lie costs the whole proposal.

39. The add-on menu

Use when: you want to raise the average project value without pushing.

> Create an optional add-on menu for an interior project in [CITY]. Suggest five add-ons a client can choose later: full-home styling, lighting upgrade, custom art and decor, balcony makeover, and annual maintenance or re-styling. For each: one line on what it includes and one line on the benefit. Leave prices blank. Present it as a friendly 'you can add these later' list, not a hard sell.

Tip: add-ons sell best right after handover, when the client is happiest with the result.

40. The proposal cover message

Use when: you are sending the proposal and want it opened.

> Write a short WhatsApp or email message to accompany an interior design proposal for [CLIENT NAME] in [CITY]. Under 110 words. Warm and confident. Tell them what is inside, how long it took to prepare, and what the next step is (a 20-minute call to walk through it). Do not pressure them. End with a simple question.

Tip: offer to walk them through it live. Proposals that are explained get accepted far more often.

PART 5 OF 10

Pricing, Fees and Negotiation

Most studios undercharge and over-deliver. These prompts help you price with confidence, handle pushback gracefully, and turn free work into paid work.

41. Setting your design fee

Use when: you are deciding what to charge for a new project.

> Help me set a design fee for a [PROPERTY TYPE] of [AREA] sq ft in [CITY]. Walk through the three common models — percentage of project cost, per square foot, and flat package — and show how each would apply to this project, using the inputs I give you: [YOUR USUAL RATE OR TARGET INCOME], [TARGET PROJECTS PER MONTH], [OVERHEADS]. Do not invent market rates; use my inputs. End with a recommended fee range and a one-line rationale.

Tip: work backwards from the income you need, not from what you fear the client will pay.

42. The discount pushback reply

Use when: a client asks for a discount and you do not want to cheapen your work.

> Write a warm reply to a client who asked for a discount on an interior design fee of [AMOUNT]. Under 120 words. Do not simply say no. Instead: explain the value in what is included, offer one alternative — reducing scope rather than price, or a small goodwill gesture like free styling advice — and keep the relationship positive. Confident, never desperate.

Tip: cutting scope keeps your rate intact. Cutting rate tells the client your first number was inflated.

43. The 'your competitor quoted less' reply

Use when: a client uses a lower quote as leverage.

> Write a reply to a client who says another studio quoted less for the same interior work. Under 130 words. Do not attack the competitor. Explain that quotes differ because of scope, materials, execution responsibility and site supervision. Offer to send a like-for-like comparison so they can decide fairly. Calm and confident, and end with an easy next step.

Tip: ask what the lower quote actually includes. Nine times out of ten it is design-only.

44. Value framing: the cost-per-sq-ft explainer

Use when: a client cannot see why interiors cost what they cost.

> Write a short explainer for an Indian client on what drives interior cost per square foot: scope, finish level, materials, modular versus loose furniture, civil work, and site conditions. Explain in plain English why two homes of the same size can differ by a wide margin, and give a simple analogy (for example, the difference between a hatchback and an SUV at the same showroom). Under 200 words. Do not invent rates.

Tip: the car analogy works because every Indian client understands it instantly.

45. Raising your fees

Use when: you have not increased your rates in a while.

> Help me raise my interior design fees. Write: (1) a short internal checklist of when it is time to raise rates, (2) a friendly message to inform existing clients of a change from [DATE], and (3) a confident script for telling a new client your new rate without apologising. Warm, professional, no over-explaining. Keep each part short and usable.

Tip: never apologise for your rate. State it and stop talking — the silence is where they say yes.

46. Scope creep to paid change order

Use when: a client keeps adding small requests after sign-off.

> A client on an interior project keeps adding small requests that are outside the agreed scope — for example [LIST 2-3 EXAMPLES]. Write a polite WhatsApp message that: acknowledges the new request warmly, explains it is outside the agreed scope, and offers to handle it as a small paid variation or a change order with a clear one-line price placeholder. Under 130 words. No blame, no drama.

Tip: log every extra request in one place from day one. Scope creep is invisible until you total it.

47. The consultation-only offer

Use when: a lead is not ready for a full project and you want a paid entry point.

> Create a three-tier consultation offer for an interior design studio in [CITY]: Basic (a single room or space plan), Standard (a full home concept and mood boards), and Premium (a full concept plus a site walkthrough and vendor guidance). For each: what the client gets, the ideal situation, and how long it takes. Leave prices as [PLACEHOLDER]. Present as a simple, attractive table.

Tip: a paid consultation converts far better than a free one — the client who pays is already invested.

48. Design-only versus turnkey upsell

Use when: the client wants design only and you would rather run the execution.

> Write a short, honest pitch to a client who has asked for design-only work, explaining the benefits of choosing your turnkey execution instead. Under 150 words. Cover: single accountability, better material pricing through your vendor network, on-time supervision, and a single warranty. Do not pressure — end by saying both options are fine and you will support either way.

Tip: the strongest turnkey pitch is one that genuinely respects the client's freedom to say no.

49. The 'we will buy furniture ourselves' client

Use when: the client wants to source furniture and decor on their own.

> Write a helpful reply to a client who says they will buy furniture and decor themselves after your design. Under 140 words. Support their choice, and give them a short, practical buying checklist so the pieces fit the design: measurements, colour rules, finish matching, and lead time. Offer to review their selections before they buy. Warm and useful, not defensive.

Tip: helping them buy well keeps your design intact and makes you the studio they recommend.

50. The retainer or annual-maintenance pitch

Use when: a project is finishing and you want recurring revenue.

> Write a short pitch for an annual interior care or re-styling retainer for a client whose project you just completed in [CITY]. Under 150 words. Explain what the retainer includes (seasonal styling, minor repairs, new decor, vendor coordination), why it suits busy families, and how it keeps the home looking new. Leave the price as [PLACEHOLDER]. Warm, low-pressure.

Tip: recurring revenue from past clients is the cheapest growth a studio can buy.

PART 6 OF 10

Execution and Vendor Coordination

The site is where projects are won or lost. These prompts keep vendors aligned, clients informed, and problems documented before they grow.

51. The vendor request for quote

Use when: you are sourcing a carpenter, modular vendor, painter or fabricator.

> Write a request for quote (RFQ) to an interior vendor in [CITY] for [SCOPE: modular kitchen / wardrobes / false ceiling / painting / civil work] in a [PROPERTY TYPE]. Include: project location, scope summary, quantity, material and finish specification, expected start and completion dates, and what the quote must show (unit rates, timeline, warranty, payment terms). Professional and clear, under 180 words.

Tip: always ask two or three vendors for the same written scope. Apples to apples is how you get real prices.

52. The vendor comparison matrix

Use when: quotes have come in and you need to choose.

> Create a vendor comparison matrix for interior work in [CITY]. Rows: vendor name, quoted amount, scope included, material quality, timeline, warranty, payment terms, past reliability, and a notes column. Add a scoring column and a short method for weighting price against reliability. Then explain, in three lines, how to use the matrix without always picking the cheapest.

Tip: the cheapest vendor usually costs the most in rework. Weight reliability as heavily as price.

53. The site visit report

Use when: you want a written record of every site visit.

> Create a site visit report template for an interior project in [CITY]. Include: date and time, people present, work completed since last visit, work in progress, quality observations, issues found, photographs taken, action items with owners and deadlines, and a next-visit date. One page, clean and printable. Add a short note on why a written report protects both the studio and the client.

Tip: a dated site report is your best defence if a client later disputes what was agreed on site.

54. The snag and defect list

Use when: you are checking completed work before handover.

> Create a snag list template for an interior project handover. Columns: room, item, description of the defect, severity (critical / major / minor), photo reference, responsible vendor, target fix date, and status. Cover common issues: alignment of shutters, gaps, paint patches, electrical points, plumbing leaks, and finish damage. Add a one-line note on the difference between a snag and a warranty defect.

Tip: never hand over without a signed snag list. It sets exactly what will be fixed and by when.

55. The change order note

Use when: the client changes something after approval.

> Write a change order note for an interior project. Include: the original scope, the requested change, the impact on cost, the impact on timeline, and the client's written approval line. Keep it to one page and use plain English. Add a short note explaining why no change should be executed on site until the change order is signed.

Tip: a verbal change is a free change. A signed change order is a paid one.

56. The material delay message

Use when: a material is late and the client needs to know before they notice.

> Write a WhatsApp message to [CLIENT NAME] about a delay in a material for their interior project in [CITY]. Under 120 words. Be honest and specific: what is delayed, why, the new expected date, and what you are doing about it (for example, offering a substitute or resequencing the work). Apologise once, then focus on the solution. Never blame the client.

Tip: tell the client before they find out. Bad news ages badly, but it ages worse when they discover it.

57. The project delay letter

Use when: the whole project is running late and you need to reset expectations in writing.

> Write a short, professional message to a client whose interior project in [CITY] has slipped past the agreed date. Include: a straight acknowledgement, the reasons without excuses, a revised completion date, the recovery plan, and what the client can expect next. Under 180 words. Calm, accountable, and specific. Do not promise a date you cannot hold.

Tip: give a revised date with a small buffer, then beat it. Under-promising and over-delivering rebuilds trust.

58. The work-in-progress update

Use when: you want to keep the client calm without endless calls.

> Write a weekly work-in-progress update message for an interior project in [CITY]. Under 120 words, in a friendly tone. Format: what was completed this week, what is planned next week, any decisions needed from the client, and one photo suggestion. Make it a template the client looks forward to, not a chore.

Tip: one predictable weekly update prevents ten anxious calls. Set the day and stick to it.

59. The contractor scope brief

Use when: you are handing work to a site contractor and want no confusion.

> Write a scope brief for a site contractor for an interior project in [CITY]. Include: the exact work, the areas, the sequence, the materials to be used, the quality standard, the safety and society rules, the daily working hours, and the sign-off process. End with a one-line note that any work outside this brief needs written approval. Clear and practical.

Tip: a contractor with a written brief does less guesswork — and guesswork is where rework comes from.

60. The handover and warranty pack

Use when: the project is done and you want a professional finish.

> Create a handover pack contents list for a completed interior project in [CITY]. Include: the final invoice, the snag list with closures, a warranty note covering workmanship and vendor items, a care and maintenance guide for the finishes used, a list of recommended service contacts, and a thank-you note. Then write a short cover message to send it to the client. Warm and professional.

Tip: a tidy handover pack is what turns a finished project into a referral.

PART 7 OF 10

Instagram and Content Engine

Interior design is sold on the eyes. These twelve prompts turn one finished project into weeks of content that brings enquiries — without a marketing agency.

61. Content pillars for a design studio

Use when: you post randomly and want a strategy.

> Define five content pillars for an Indian interior design studio in [CITY]. For each pillar give: the purpose, three example post ideas, and the type of follower it attracts. Suggested pillars to consider: finished projects, process and behind-the-scenes, homeowner tips, material and finish education, and studio personality. Keep it practical and specific to [CITY] homes.

Tip: rotate the pillars. A feed that is only project photos stops teaching, and teaching is what builds trust.

62. The 30-day content calendar

Use when: you want a month of posts planned in one sitting.

> Create a 30-day Instagram content calendar for an interior design studio in [CITY]. For each day give: format (reel, carousel, single image, story), the pillar, a specific topic, and a one-line hook. Include a mix of project reveals, tips, and behind-the-scenes. Leave one day a week for a story-only day. Keep topics realistic for a small studio with limited content.

Tip: batch-shoot once a week. Planning a month takes an hour; posting daily without a plan takes your evenings.

63. Reel script: project reveal

Use when: you have finished a project and want a scroll-stopping reveal.

> Write a 30-second Instagram Reel script for an interior project reveal in [CITY] — a [PROPERTY TYPE] in [STYLE]. Include: a hook line for the first 2 seconds, a shot list (before shot, transition, key rooms, hero detail, final wide shot), an on-screen text sequence, a voiceover line for each shot, a trending-audio suggestion (describe the vibe), and a caption with a call to action. Do not invent project statistics.

Tip: show the before for two seconds first. The transformation is the hook, not the finished room.

64. Reel script: before and after

Use when: you want the highest-performing format in interiors.

> Write a 20-second Instagram Reel script built around a before/after transformation of an interior in [CITY]. Include: the hook, the exact transition (match-cut on a door or wall), three quick after-shots, on-screen text for each, a voiceover, and a caption that ends with a question to drive comments. Keep it simple enough to shoot on a phone.

Tip: match the before and after camera position exactly. A clean match-cut is what makes these reels travel.

65. Reel script: three mistakes homeowners make

Use when: you want an educational reel that positions you as the expert.

> Write a 30-second Reel script for an interior design studio in [CITY] titled '3 mistakes homeowners make with interiors'. For each mistake: the mistake, why it costs money or comfort, and the fix. Add a hook, a shot list, on-screen text, and a caption ending with a soft call to action for a consultation. Practical and India-specific.

Tip: educational reels get saved and shared, and saves are what push you to new audiences.

66. Carousel: mood board breakdown

Use when: you want to show your thinking, not just your results.

> Write a 7-slide Instagram carousel breaking down a mood board for a [ROOM] in [STYLE]. Slide 1: hook and result. Slides 2-5: the palette, the materials, the lighting, and the furniture direction, one per slide. Slide 6: the one thing to get right. Slide 7: a call to action. Give the caption and a suggested set of on-image text for each slide. Simple English.

Tip: carousels are saved more than reels. Save-worthy content is what builds a serious following.

67. Caption bank for finished projects

Use when: you have photos but the caption takes forever.

> Write five caption templates for finished interior projects, each for a different mood: a compact city apartment, a warm family home, a minimalist office, a luxury villa, and a budget smart makeover. Each caption: a hook, two to three lines of story, three homeowner takeaways, and a call to action. Under 120 words each. Leave [CITY] and [ROOM] as placeholders.

Tip: keep a caption bank in your notes app. Writing from scratch every time is what kills consistency.

68. Local hashtag set

Use when: you want local reach, not vanity reach.

> Build a hashtag set for an interior design studio in [CITY]. Give: 8 city-specific hashtags, 8 niche design hashtags, 6 broad but relevant hashtags, and 3 branded hashtags for the studio. Explain in one line why a smaller local set often outperforms a giant generic set. Keep it to about 25 tags total.

Tip: a client in your city is worth more than a thousand likes from elsewhere. Optimise for local.

69. Google Business Profile post

Use when: you want local search traffic, not just Instagram.

> Write a Google Business Profile post for an interior design studio in [CITY] announcing a recent project. Under 90 words. Include what was done, where, and a soft call to action with the studio's phone number [NUMBER]. Add a short note on why posting regularly on Google Business helps the studio appear in local 'near me' searches.

Tip: Google Business is where ready-to-buy clients look. Post there every couple of weeks at least.

70. One project into fifteen posts

Use when: you shot a project and want maximum mileage from it.

> Take one completed interior project and turn it into a 15-post content plan. For each post: format, pillar, topic, and a one-line hook. Cover the reveal, the before/after, a material spotlight, a design decision explained, a client-need story, a mistake avoided, a room-by-room mini-tour, a styling tip, and a call to action. Practical for a small studio.

Tip: one good project should feed a month of content. Shoot it properly on handover day.

71. Story series: a day on site

Use when: you want to show the work behind the work.

> Write a 6-frame Instagram Story series for a day on site at an interior project in [CITY]. For each frame: a photo idea, a one-line caption, and an optional poll or question sticker. Show the mess, the measurements, the vendor chat, and one satisfying detail. Warm, human, unpolished. End with a link or question sticker to drive DMs.

Tip: raw site stories build more trust than polished renders. Clients buy the person, then the work.

72. The client testimonial post

Use when: a happy client gives you a great line.

> Write an Instagram post built around a client testimonial. Use this quote: '[CLIENT QUOTE]'. Create: a hook line, a short paragraph setting the scene (the client's need and the outcome), three lines on what made the project work, and a call to action. Do not exaggerate the quote or invent details. Keep it warm and specific.

Tip: pair the testimonial with one photo from that client's home. Proof and picture together is unbeatable.

PART 8 OF 10

Reviews, Referrals and Repeat Business

A studio grows on its last fifty clients, not its next fifty leads. These prompts turn finished projects into reviews, referrals, and repeat work.

73. The review ask after handover

Use when: a project just finished and the client is happy.

> Write a warm WhatsApp message asking a satisfied interior design client in [CITY] to leave a Google review for [STUDIO NAME]. Under 90 words. Thank them for the project, tell them the review helps other families find you, and make it easy — give the direct link [GOOGLE REVIEW LINK] and suggest two or three things they could mention. No pressure, no guilt.

Tip: ask the same day you hand over, while the joy is fresh. A week later, it is a chore.

74. Replying to a positive review

Use when: someone leaves a five-star review.

> Write a reply to this positive Google review for an interior design studio: '[REVIEW TEXT]'. Under 60 words. Thank the reviewer by name, refer to one specific detail they mentioned, and end warmly. Do not repeat the same reply template for every review — make it feel written for this client. Professional and human.

Tip: reply to every review. It signals to future clients that you care after the sale, not just before it.

75. Replying to a negative review

Use when: an unhappy client or a competitor leaves a bad review.

> Write a calm, professional reply to this negative review for an interior design studio: '[REVIEW TEXT]'. Under 90 words. Do not argue, do not blame the reviewer, and do not get defensive. Acknowledge their experience, apologise for the frustration, state one fact if it is relevant, and invite them to contact you directly at [PHONE/EMAIL] to resolve it. End positively.

Tip: your reply is written for future clients, not for the angry one. Stay dignified and move the conversation offline.

76. The referral programme pitch

Use when: you want happy clients to bring you more clients.

> Write a simple referral programme message for an interior design studio in [CITY]. Under 130 words. Explain how it works: an existing client refers a friend, and when that friend books, the referrer gets [REWARD — a gift, a styling session, or a credit]. Keep it classy, not like a coupon scheme, and make it feel like a thank-you rather than a transaction.

Tip: a referral from a happy client closes far faster than any ad. Reward generously and promptly.

77. The past-client revival message

Use when: a past client has gone quiet and it has been a year or more.

> Write a warm, low-pressure WhatsApp message to a past interior design client from about a year ago. Under 90 words. Check in, mention one small seasonal tip (for example, pre-monsoon care for wooden furniture), and gently remind them you are there if they want to refresh a room or style for a festival. No hard sell.

Tip: seasonal tips are the perfect excuse to reconnect without looking like you only want money.

78. The builder or architect tie-up pitch

Use when: you want a steady stream of project-channel work.

> Write a professional pitch to a [builder/architect/real-estate broker] in [CITY] proposing a partnership with [STUDIO NAME]. Under 180 words. Explain the benefit to their clients (a ready interior partner, one point of contact, on-time handover), what you bring, and a simple way to start (a trial batch of units or a co-branded offer). Corporate and confident, no fluff.

Tip: builders care about their handover reputation. Lead with 'your clients will thank you', not with your portfolio.

79. The annual refresh offer

Use when: you want repeat work from past clients at festival time.

> Write a festive-season refresh offer for past interior clients of [STUDIO NAME] in [CITY]. Under 140 words. Offer a small, affordable service: styling for a festival, refreshing a living room, or adding lighting and decor. Explain the benefit (a new look without a full renovation) and leave the price as [PLACEHOLDER]. Warm and seasonal, no pressure.

Tip: festival season is the easiest time to sell a small refresh. Timing matters more than the offer.

80. The case study write-up

Use when: you want a persuasive document for future proposals.

> Write a one-page case study of a completed interior project in [CITY]. Structure: the client's brief and constraints, the design approach, the solution, and the outcome in the client's own words (use [CLIENT QUOTE] if given, otherwise write [CLIENT QUOTE] as a placeholder — never invent it). Include a note on what made the project challenging. Professional and specific.

Tip: three strong case studies do more for your proposals than fifty photos in a gallery.

PART 9 OF 10

Business, Money and Team

Design is a business. These ten prompts help you price, plan, hire, document and review — so the studio earns what it should.

81. The project P&L; check

Use when: you want to know if a project actually made money.

> Create a simple project profit-and-loss template for an interior project in India. Inputs: fee received, material cost, labour and vendor cost, site expenses, transport, and overhead share. Outputs: gross profit, net profit, and profit as a percentage of fee. Add a short note on the most common hidden costs that eat interior design margins (rework, free changes, delayed payments, transport). One clean table.

Tip: review the P&L; of every project. Most studios are shocked by how much rework and transport cost.

82. Capacity and pipeline plan

Use when: you keep saying yes and then drowning.

> Help me plan studio capacity for [STUDIO NAME]. Given that one designer can comfortably run [NUMBER] projects at once, and a project takes about [MONTHS] months, work out how many new projects we can take per month to stay healthy, and how many we should be quoting to keep the pipeline full. Then suggest a simple pipeline tracker with stages (enquiry, brief, proposal, signed, in progress, handover).

Tip: the number of projects you can quote is always larger than the number you can deliver. Plan to both.

83. Hiring brief for a junior designer

Use when: you are ready to bring on help.

> Write a hiring brief for a junior interior designer for [STUDIO NAME] in [CITY]. Include: the role in one line, day-to-day responsibilities (drafting, site visits, vendor follow-up, client coordination), must-have skills (AutoCAD/SketchUp, basic 3D, communication), nice-to-haves, and how to assess them (a small paid test task). Add a note on what to look for beyond the portfolio. Professional and clear.

Tip: hire for reliability and communication first, software skills second. You can teach SketchUp; you cannot teach ownership.

84. Studio SOP: enquiry to handover

Use when: you want the studio to run the same way every time.

> Write a standard operating procedure (SOP) for an interior design studio in [CITY] covering the full journey: enquiry, qualification, brief, concept, proposal, signing, execution, handover and post-handover. For each stage give: the owner, the key actions, the document produced, and the client touchpoint. Keep it to one page and practical enough to actually follow.

Tip: an SOP is what lets you take a holiday. Document the steps you repeat every project.

85. The quarterly goal plan

Use when: you want to run the studio, not just work in it.

> Help me set quarterly goals for an interior design studio in [CITY]. Cover four areas: revenue, marketing, operations, and skills. For each area give two or three specific, measurable goals for the next quarter, and one habit that will make each happen. Keep it realistic for a small studio. End with a one-line weekly check-in question I can ask myself.

Tip: three goals per quarter, not thirty. Fewer goals get done.

86. Vendor payment and credit terms

Use when: you want to keep good vendors without straining cash flow.

> Write a short guide on vendor payment and credit terms for an interior design studio in India. Cover: when to pay an advance, how to link payments to milestones, how to negotiate credit with regular vendors, and how to keep a good relationship when a client's payment to you is late. Practical and honest, under 200 words. Do not give legal advice — add a line to consult a professional for contracts.

Tip: pay your good vendors on time even when a client is slow. They are the ones who save your deadlines.

87. The client contract checklist

Use when: you are signing a client and want the basics covered.

> Create a checklist of what an interior design and execution contract in India should cover: parties, scope and deliverables, exclusions, fee and GST, payment milestones, timeline, revision limits, change orders, cancellation and refund terms, warranty, and dispute resolution. For each item give a one-line note on why it matters. End with a line advising the client and studio to have a lawyer review the final contract.

Tip: a clear contract protects the client as much as you. Frame it that way and nobody resists signing.

88. The yearly marketing plan

Use when: you want enquiries all year, not just in season.

> Build a 12-month marketing plan for an interior design studio in [CITY]. For each quarter give: the main focus (for example, project-channel tie-ups, Instagram growth, past-client reactivation, or festival offers), two or three actions, and the one metric to watch. Keep it simple enough to actually run alongside projects. No paid-ads jargon.

Tip: match marketing to the housing cycle. New handovers and festival season are when clients are ready.

89. The monthly business review

Use when: you want to stay on top of the numbers.

> Create a monthly business review template for an interior design studio in India. Cover: enquiries received, proposals sent, projects won, projects completed, revenue invoiced, revenue collected, outstanding payments, and top three lessons. Add three questions to ask every month (what worked, what cost me time, what will I change). One page.

Tip: an hour on the first of every month will tell you more about your studio than a year of gut feel.

90. The studio brand voice guide

Use when: you want everything you write to sound like you.

> Write a short brand voice guide for [STUDIO NAME], an interior design practice in [CITY]. Define: the studio's personality in three words, the tone for client messages (warm, confident, simple), words we use, words we avoid (jargon, over-promising), and three sample sentences written in our voice. Then explain how this keeps proposals, captions and client messages consistent.

Tip: a consistent voice makes a small studio feel like a brand. Decide the tone once and reuse it everywhere.

PART 10 OF 10

Client Care and Difficult Conversations

The hard messages decide whether a client refers you or reviews you. These ten prompts help you handle the awkward ones with grace and a clear spine.

91. The budget-overrun conversation

Use when: costs have risen and the client needs to know.

> Write a message to a client whose interior project is running over budget because of [REASON]. Under 150 words. Be transparent and early. Explain what changed, what it costs, and give two clear options (reduce scope, or approve the extra). Apologise once, take responsibility for the communication, and end with a clear question. Never hide the number.

Tip: raise a budget risk the moment you see it. A surprise at the end destroys trust you spent months building.

92. The missed-deadline message

Use when: you will not hit a date you promised.

> Write a message to a client about a missed deadline on their interior project in [CITY]. Under 130 words. Acknowledge it plainly, give the real reason without excuses, give a new realistic date, and state the recovery plan. Do not over-apologise or blame vendors in a way that looks unprofessional. Calm and accountable.

Tip: tell them before the deadline, not after. Owning it early keeps the relationship; hiding it ends it.

93. The unhappy-client recovery

Use when: a client is upset and you need to win them back.

> A client is unhappy about [ISSUE] on their interior project. Write a message that: listens without getting defensive, acknowledges their feeling, states clearly what you will do to fix it and by when, and offers one reasonable goodwill gesture. Under 160 words. Warm but not grovelling. End by confirming the next step.

Tip: most unhappy clients are not looking for a refund — they are looking for someone to take the problem seriously.

94. The refund or cancellation request reply

Use when: a client asks to cancel or get money back.

> Write a reply to a client requesting a refund or cancellation on an interior project. Under 160 words. Refer to the agreed cancellation terms, explain clearly what has been done and what can be refunded or adjusted, and offer to discuss options such as pausing, reducing scope, or transferring the amount to future work. Stay professional and fair. Do not give legal advice — add a line that for disputes they may seek independent advice.

Tip: stay factual and kind. Most cancellations can be turned into a pause or a scope reduction.

95. Handling 'I do not like the design'

Use when: the client rejects the concept.

> Write a message to a client who says they do not like the design concept for their [ROOM]. Under 150 words. Do not take it personally. Ask three specific questions to understand what is not working (palette, layout, materials, or mood), remind them of how many revisions are included, and offer a focused revision. Confident and collaborative.

Tip: 'what specifically feels off' gets you a fix. 'Why don't you like it' gets you a fight.

96. The scope-dispute resolution

Use when: the client claims something was included that was not.

> A client is disputing whether [ITEM] was part of the agreed scope. Write a calm message that: refers to the signed scope document and the BOQ, presents the facts without accusation, proposes a practical way forward (handle it as a paid variation, or find an alternative), and keeps the relationship intact. Under 160 words.

Tip: always keep the signed scope and BOQ handy. Documents end disputes that memory cannot.

97. The delayed-payment reminder sequence

Use when: an invoice is overdue.

> Write a four-message payment reminder sequence for an overdue interior design invoice: day 1 (gentle reminder), day 7 (firm reminder with the amount and due date), day 14 (note that work may pause), and day 30 (final notice before escalation). Each under 90 words, professional and firm but never rude. Add a line that for serious disputes the studio may seek professional advice.

Tip: escalate slowly and document everything. Polite and persistent collects more than angry and fast.

98. The 'we want to pause' reply

Use when: the client wants to stop mid-project.

> Write a reply to a client who wants to pause their interior project midway. Under 150 words. Understand their reason, explain what happens to the work done so far and the money paid, and offer a clear way to restart later (what will be needed, and any cost implications). Keep the door open warmly. Do not pressure them.

Tip: how you handle a pause decides whether they come back — or go to another studio.

99. The handover-complaint reply

Use when: the client finds issues after handover.

> Write a reply to a client who reports problems after handover on their interior project. Under 140 words. Thank them for telling you, ask for photos and specifics, confirm which items fall under the workmanship warranty, and give a clear timeline for the visit and the fix. Reassuring and accountable, not defensive.

Tip: treat post-handover issues as a chance to prove your warranty is real. Fast fixes make loyal referrers.

100. The end-of-project thank-you

Use when: the project is done and you want the relationship to continue.

> Write a warm end-of-project thank-you message to a client whose interior project you just completed in [CITY]. Under 130 words. Thank them for their trust, mention one favourite detail of the home, remind them of the warranty and how to reach you, gently ask for a Google review with the link [LINK], and mention you would love to help again if they refresh a room later. Sincere, not salesy.

Tip: the last message is the one they remember. Make it generous and it becomes a referral.

Appendix A

The Master Context Block and the five habits

Paste this once at the top of a new chat with ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini or any modern assistant. It gives the AI the background so every prompt below works better. Replace the brackets with your details.

```
You are my interior design assistant for [STUDIO NAME], an interior design practice in [CITY], India. We design and execute residential and light-commercial interiors. We work in Indian conditions: strong sunlight, small city apartments, monsoon humidity, society rules and budget-conscious families. Our clients are mostly [CLIENT TYPE]. Our style is [YOUR STYLE]. Always write in simple, warm English for an Indian audience. Use square brackets where you need a detail from me. Never invent prices, brands, project statistics, or client quotes — leave [PLACEHOLDER] instead. Keep messages short enough for WhatsApp unless I ask for a document.

The five habits that make every prompt work

- Fill the brackets. The more specific the input, the more useful the output. A prompt with [CITY], [AREA], [BUDGET] and [STYLE] beats a vague one every time.
- Give a role and a limit. 'You are a studio manager' plus 'under 120 words' produces something you can actually send.
- Ask for the format you want. Say 'give me a table', 'give me a WhatsApp message', or 'give me three options' — do not leave it to chance.
- Never trust a fact you did not supply. AI will invent a per-square-foot rate, a brand, or a client quote if you let it. Every prompt here tells it not to.
- Edit before you send. AI drafts; you are the designer. Read every message in your own voice before it reaches a client.

A note on images

The image-tool prompts in Part 3 are for Midjourney, Krea, or any similar tool. Use the output as a visual reference in a conversation, and always label it 'indicative' to the client. Never present an AI render as a final design, and never let it replace your own drawings and 3D views.

Appendix B

Why now: the India interior design market in 2026-27

Every figure below was checked in October 2026. Use them when you pitch, plan, or explain the market to a client or a builder.

- The India interior design market was sized at about USD 35.48 billion in 2026, projected to reach about USD 72.04 billion by 2032 — a compound growth of about 12.46% a year (Mordor Intelligence).
- In 2026, commercial interiors held about 73.6% of the market, while residential services are forecast to grow fastest, at roughly 16% a year. Mid-range projects led at about 52% of the market, and North India accounted for about 40%.
- The residential home-interiors market alone was about Rs 1.27 lakh crore in 2024, on track to roughly double to Rs 2.75 lakh crore by 2030 — near 12% a year (GHAR.tv).
- Roughly 90% of interior and furniture volume still flows through unorganised carpenters and small workshops — which is exactly the gap a professional, organised studio fills.
- Typical full-home packages run about Rs 6-15 lakh for a mid-range 2BHK and Rs 22-35 lakh-plus for a luxury 3BHK, with fit-out costs from about Rs 1,200-1,800 per sq ft (basic) rising to Rs 3,000-6,000-plus per sq ft (luxury).
- Tier-2 cities are the breakout engine, growing at roughly 19% a year versus about 12% in the metros — and about 82% of that demand is renovation and resale-led rather than new-home-led.
- The September 2025 GST overhaul cut plywood, laminates and MDF from 28% to 18% and unified most furniture at 18%, lowering input costs for organised, compliant studios.

GST, TDS and compliance quick reference

This is a starting point, checked against official sources in October 2026. Tax rules change. Always confirm the current position with your chartered accountant before you bill a client.

GST on interior design and execution

- Pure design and consultancy (space planning, drawings, 3D views, advisory — no supply of materials): 18% GST. The specialty design service classification that includes interior design is SAC 998391 (CBIC service classification).
- Turnkey project where you also supply and install materials (furniture, flooring, false ceiling, fixtures): this is a works contract under SAC 9954, and it generally attracts 18% GST on the whole value. Concessional 12% rates apply only to specified government and affordable-housing cases — not to ordinary private work.
- Registration becomes mandatory once aggregate turnover crosses Rs 20 lakh in a financial year (lower in special-category states). For interstate supply, registration is required regardless of turnover.
- Place of supply for a works contract is where the immovable property is located, so interstate projects can trigger IGST. Pure consultancy follows the general place-of-supply rules.
- Input tax credit: your business clients can claim ITC on pure advisory design fees. ITC is blocked for works-contract services used for construction of an immovable property (Section 17(5)(c)), except plant and machinery.

TDS your business clients must deduct from your fee

- Pure design and consultancy is treated as a professional service — Section 194J at 10%, with a threshold of about Rs 50,000 per financial year for professional fees.
- Turnkey execution (materials plus work) is treated as a contract — Section 194C at 1% for individual/HUF payees and 2% for others, with thresholds of about Rs 30,000 for a single payment or Rs 1,00,000 in a year.
- If you have not furnished your PAN, TDS is deducted at a higher flat rate (about 20%). Always share your PAN with business clients.

Note: interior decoration is a listed professional service, so design-only work is normally 194J. When the same studio does a turnkey job, the execution portion is typically 194C. Many contracts contain both — bifurcate the design fee and the execution value on the invoice.

The AI tool stack for designers (October 2026)

Prices below are the providers' published list prices in US dollars per month, before tax, checked in October 2026. Most are billed in USD, so your card is charged in rupees at the prevailing rate. Use the free tiers to test before you subscribe.

Tool	Free tier	Paid from	What it is best at for a designer
ChatGPT	Yes	Go $8; Plus $20; Pro from $100	Client messages, proposals, BOQ wording, business writing
Claude	Yes	Pro $20 (or $17/mo billed yearly); Max from $100	Long documents, concept notes, careful editing
Google Gemini	Yes	AI Plus $4.99; AI Pro $19.99; Ultra from $99.99	Everyday drafting, working inside Gmail and Docs
Midjourney	No	Basic $10; Standard $30; Pro $60	Photorealistic interior concept renders and mood visuals
Perplexity	Yes	Pro from about $20	Fast, sourced research on materials, trends and vendors

Also worth knowing: Canva (free tier, paid Pro) for fast presentations and social posts, and Adobe Firefly for image editing. Krea and similar tools offer free daily image generations. Pick one chat assistant and one image tool to start — do not subscribe to everything at once.

The verification checklist

Run this before any AI-drafted content reaches a client. This is the page that protects your reputation.

- Prices and rates — never let AI set a per-square-foot rate, a project cost, or a material price. Use your own numbers.
- Brands and products — check that a material or finish AI names actually exists and is available in [CITY] before you specify it.
- Dimensions and quantities — recheck every measurement against the site survey. AI does arithmetic badly.
- Renders — label every AI image as 'indicative' and never present it as a final design.
- Tax lines — confirm GST and TDS with your accountant, not with the AI.
- Client details — check names, addresses, dates and the scope match the signed brief.
- Quotes and testimonials — never use an AI-invented quote or statistic. If you do not have the real one, leave a placeholder.
- Your voice — read every message aloud before sending. If it does not sound like you, rewrite it.

The 30-day ramp-up plan and the one-page cheat sheet

One small action a day for a month. By day 30 you will have a full, reusable system.

- Day 1-2: Paste the Master Context block and run prompts 1-5 on a real enquiry. Save the ones you like.
- Day 3-5: Build your onboarding questionnaire (11), budget reality-check (13) and 24-hour recap (20).
- Day 6-9: Create your concept note and mood board templates (21-25) and save two image-tool prompts you like.
- Day 10-13: Build your proposal skeleton (31), three-tier packages (32) and BOQ template (34).
- Day 14-16: Sort out your fee model (41) and your discount and comparison replies (42-44).
- Day 17-20: Set up your site visit report (53), snag list (54) and weekly update template (58).
- Day 21-24: Build your content pillars (61), a 30-day calendar (62) and shoot one batch of content.
- Day 25-27: Set up your review ask (73), referral programme (76) and past-client revival message (77).
- Day 28-30: Create your project P&L; (81), monthly review (89) and the full studio SOP (84).

The one-page cheat sheet: ten rules

- Reply fast. Speed beats polish on the first reply.
- Never quote a price before you know the scope.
- Fill the brackets — specific in, useful out.
- AI drafts, you design. Edit everything before it reaches a client.
- Never let AI invent a price, a brand, a statistic or a quote.
- Always state what is not included. It is your best protection.
- Log every extra request as a paid change order.
- Tell the client about a delay before they discover it.
- Ask for the review the day you hand over.
- One finished project should feed a month of content.

Thank you

You now have a complete system for running an interior design studio with AI as your assistant. Start with the prompts you need today, save the ones that work, and edit everything before it reaches a client. If this pack saved you time, a review helps other designers find it.
