2026-27 SEASON EDITION

By Faisal Fayaz Lone | First Edition, October 2026

About this pack

The AI Prompt Pack for Indian Bridal Makeup Artists & Makeup Studios - 2026-27 Season Edition. Published by Digitalaikart, October 2026.

Every market figure, price, tax rate and date in this pack was checked against published sources in October 2026. Tax rates, platform pricing and AI tool prices change; the pack tells you where to re-verify. Nothing here is legal, tax or financial advice - confirm your own position with a qualified professional.

These prompts are drafting tools. AI output must be checked and edited by you before it reaches a client. The pack repeats this rule because it is the one that matters most.

This pack is built for one person: the Indian bridal makeup artist who is good with a brush and tired of doing everything else by hand. The DMs at 11 pm. The “kitna lagega?” message. The quote you rewrite from scratch every time. The caption you never got around to posting. The bride who went quiet and you never followed up.

None of that is makeup work. All of it decides whether your season is full.

What is inside

One hundred numbered AI prompts across ten parts, following the real arc of a bridal booking: the enquiry, the consultation, the look, the price, the paperwork, the wedding morning, Instagram, reviews and referrals, the business behind the chair, and the difficult conversations nobody trains you for. Each prompt is written to be pasted straight into ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini or any modern assistant, with the square brackets filled in with your own details.

Then six appendices with the verified part: the 2026-27 wedding market and season, a GST quick reference for beauty services, the WhatsApp and Instagram cost changes that landed on 1 October 2026, the AI tool stack with India prices checked in October 2026, a verification checklist, and a 30-day season ramp-up plan.

How to use it

- Read Appendix A first. It has the Master Context Block you paste once at the start of every chat, and the five habits that make every prompt in this pack work.
- Start with Part 1. Save the first three prompts as WhatsApp Quick Replies today - they will pay for this pack in the first week of the season.
- Work through one part a week in the off-season, so the system is built before December arrives.
- In season, use the parts as a reference: jump straight to the prompt you need, fill in the brackets, edit the output in your own voice, send it.
- Never send an AI draft to a client without reading it. These prompts save you the blank page, not the judgement.

How each prompt is written

Every prompt in this pack has the same five parts, so you always know where to look:

- Number - so you can find it again, and so the 30-day ramp-up plan in Appendix F can point you straight to it.
- Title - what the prompt does, in one line.
- Use when - the exact moment in your workflow it earns its place.
- The prompt box - the text you paste. Everything inside [square brackets] is yours to fill in.
- Studio tip - a practical note from the trade, not from an AI. These are the lines that make the difference between a reply that books and one that gets ignored.

Five mistakes this pack is built to prevent

- Replying late. Brides message several artists at once; the first clear reply usually wins the booking.
- Quoting a price before you know the date, city, functions and number of faces - which is how artists under-quote and regret it.
- Pricing from whatever the artist who trained you charged, instead of from your own product cost, hours and season.
- Letting an AI draft a price, a policy or a product into a client message. That is always yours to set.
- Doing beautiful work and never asking for the review, the referral or the repeat booking - the cheapest growth you have.

What this pack will not do

It will not invent your prices, your policies, your portfolio or your voice - and neither should any AI you use with it. Every prompt in this pack carries the same rule: never invent a price, a policy, a product, a statistic or a client quote. Leave a placeholder and fill it in yourself. That rule is the difference between AI that saves you an hour and AI that costs you a client.

PART 1

Enquiry & First Reply

Your reply speed is your close rate. Brides shortlist 5-10 artists and message several at once - the artist who replies first, with a clear next step, usually wins the booking. These 10 prompts give you a fast, warm, professional reply to every kind of enquiry.

01 The 60-second first reply

Use when: Use when a new enquiry lands on WhatsApp or Instagram and you are mid-work.

> You are my booking assistant for my bridal makeup studio. A bride has enquired on [WhatsApp / Instagram DM]. Her message: "[paste her message]". Write a warm reply of under 60 words that: (1) thanks her by name if known, (2) confirms I am available to check the date, (3) asks the 4 things I need before quoting - wedding date, city/venue, which functions she needs makeup for, and whether she needs hair and draping, (4) ends with one clear next step. Tone: friendly, professional, no over-promising. Do not quote any price. Do not invent anything.

Studio tip: Save this as a WhatsApp Quick Reply so it is one tap away. Reply within an hour during season - most brides book the first two or three artists who respond properly.

02 The Instagram DM to WhatsApp handoff

Use when: Use when an enquiry starts in Instagram DMs but you want it in WhatsApp where you can send PDFs and invoices.

> Write a short Instagram DM reply that moves this bride to WhatsApp without sounding pushy. Her enquiry: "[paste]". The message must: acknowledge her interest, give one line about my style or speciality, then invite her to WhatsApp on [number] for packages and availability, with a reason - "so I can send you my full bridal package and 2026-27 season availability". Under 50 words, one emoji maximum, no price.

Studio tip: Instagram hides link stickers from some viewers, so spell the number in the message too. Keep the same tone in both apps - brides notice a personality change.

03 The "kitna lagega?" answer

Use when: Use the moment a bride asks price in her very first message - the most common Indian enquiry.

> A bride's first message is only: "[price? / kitna lagega? / charges?]". Write a reply that answers honestly without dumping a rate card: (1) give my genuine starting range as "bridal packages start from Rs. [amount]", (2) explain in one sentence that the final quote depends on date, city, number of functions, hair and draping, and travel, (3) ask for her date and city so I can send an accurate package. Under 70 words, polite, no defensiveness.

Studio tip: A starting price filters out budget mismatches early and saves you hours. Never apologise for your price - state it and move to qualification.

04 The Hinglish reply

Use when: Use when the bride writes in Hinglish or Hindi and you want to sound like a real person, not a company.

> Rewrite this bridal enquiry reply in warm, natural Hinglish (Hindi written in English letters, the way people actually text in India). Keep all the facts the same: [paste your English reply]. Do not translate word-for-word - make it sound like a friendly Indian makeup artist texting. Keep it short, respectful (use "aap"), and include the same question about date, city and functions. Do not add any new information.

Studio tip: Match the bride's language. If she writes in Tamil, Marathi or Bengali, ask the assistant to mirror that language and script instead - it builds instant comfort.

05 Qualify before you quote

Use when: Use after the first reply, to collect everything you need in one clean message instead of ten back-and-forths.

> Write a single qualification message to send to a bridal enquiry, asking for: wedding date, city and venue, which functions she wants makeup for (mehendi, haldi, sangeet, wedding, reception), number of people who need makeup (bride, mother, sisters, bridesmaids), whether she wants HD or airbrush, whether she needs hair and saree/lehenga draping, and her approximate budget range. Format as a short numbered list she can answer in one reply. Friendly Hinglish-friendly tone, under 100 words.

Studio tip: One message with all questions gets answered; five separate questions get ignored. The budget line is optional - drop it for premium enquiries if it feels too direct.

06 Availability check and date hold

Use when: Use when a bride asks if a date is free and you want to move her toward a booking.

> A bride is asking whether I am available on [date]. Write a reply that: confirms availability honestly, explains that dates are confirmed only on a non-refundable advance of [%], offers to hold the date for [24/48] hours as a courtesy, and gives her the next step (share package, then pay advance to block). Under 80 words, warm, no pressure tactics, no invented policies beyond what I have written here.

Studio tip: Peak-season dates are inventory. A written 24-hour hold is a fair, low-pressure way to convert - and it is honest because you really can only hold it briefly.

07 Trial makeup enquiry reply

Use when: Use when a bride asks only for a trial before deciding.

> Write a reply about bridal trials. Include: that a trial is [included with the package / charged at Rs. [amount]], what a trial covers (skin prep discussion, one full look, photos in daylight and flash), when it should happen ([4-8] weeks before the wedding), and that the trial fee is [adjusted against the package / non-refundable]. End by offering two trial slots. Under 90 words.

Studio tip: Say the trial fee in the first reply, not on the day. Brides hate surprises more than they hate the fee - being upfront is what makes you look premium.

08 Reply to a price-only shopper

Use when: Use when a bride messages several artists and clearly only wants the cheapest number.

> A bride has asked only for my price and nothing else, and I suspect she is comparing on cost alone. Write a short, dignified reply that: gives my starting price, states in one line what that price includes that cheap quotes usually leave out (trial, hair, draping, lashes, premium products, travel), and invites her to share her date so I can send a proper package. Do not criticise other artists. Do not discount. Under 80 words.

Studio tip: Never enter a price war. Compete on what is included, your portfolio and your reviews - that is what a bride is actually buying.

09 The 48-hour follow-up

Use when: Use two days after your first reply when the bride has gone quiet.

> Write a gentle follow-up message to a bride who enquired [2 days ago] and has not replied. It should: be short and non-annoying, reference her original enquiry ("[date] in [city]"), add one piece of genuine value - a recent bridal photo from a similar wedding, or a note that [month] dates are filling, and ask one easy question. Under 50 words. No guilt-tripping, no "just checking in".

Studio tip: Send a photo, not a reminder. Value in the follow-up is what reopens the conversation.

10 The enquiry that is not a fit

Use when: Use when the budget, date or city genuinely does not work for you.

> Write a polite decline to a bridal enquiry I cannot take - reasons: [date already booked / budget below my range / outstation too far]. The message should: thank her, be honest about the reason in one line, offer something useful anyway (a referral to a trusted artist, or my off-season party-makeup availability), and end warmly. Under 70 words. No false hope, no rudeness.

Studio tip: A graceful no today is a referral tomorrow. Wedding vendors remember who behaved well.

PART 2

Consultation & Booking

Between "interested" and "booked" sits the consultation. Done well, it turns a price shopper into a signed package and gives you every detail you need for the wedding day. These 10 prompts run the whole path from discovery call to confirmed booking.

11 The bridal discovery call script

Use when: Use before your first call or meeting with a serious bride.

> Create a 12-question bridal consultation script for a makeup artist in India. Cover: the wedding date and which functions she needs looks for, the venue and travel distance, her outfit colours and fabric, her skin type and any allergies, her usual makeup comfort level, references she loves and ones she dislikes, who else needs makeup, her morning timeline and ready-by time, whether she wants HD or airbrush, and her budget expectation. Add one follow-up probe under each question. Keep the language simple and friendly.

Studio tip: Ask about outfit colours before you design the look. A look that fights the lehenga is a look the bride will not love, however well it is done.

12 Map her wedding timeline

Use when: Use to build a clear picture of the multi-day wedding before you quote.

> Build a wedding-function timeline for this bride: [list her functions with dates and times]. For each function, note: what time she must be ready, how many people need makeup, whether it is at home or a venue, the travel time between locations, and the realistic time you need. Flag any clash where two functions or two locations make one artist impossible, and suggest where an assistant is needed. Present as a simple table in plain English.

Studio tip: Indian weddings are three to five events, not one booking. The artist who plans the whole week wins the whole week.

13 The bridal brief you actually use on the day

Use when: Use after the consultation to lock what has been agreed.

> Turn these notes into a one-page bridal brief: [paste your consultation notes]. The brief must include: bride's name and contact, wedding date and functions, ready-by times and venue addresses, agreed looks per function, products or finishes she has asked for or refused, allergies, family members getting makeup with their names, agreed package and price, advance paid and balance due, and any special requests. Write it so I can read it in 60 seconds on the wedding morning.

Studio tip: Save the brief as a named PDF for every bride. On a busy December morning you will not remember whose mother wanted the softer lip.

14 Recommend the right package

Use when: Use when a bride is unsure what to book.

> Based on this bride's needs - [functions, people, city, budget] - recommend one of three options: a single-look booking, a multi-function bridal package, or a full bridal + family package. For the recommended option, explain in 4-5 short lines why it fits her, what it includes, what it does not include, and the price. Also name the cheaper option honestly and say when it would be the smarter choice. No upselling language, no pressure.

Studio tip: Recommending the cheaper option when it genuinely fits builds more trust than any sales pitch. Brides talk to other brides.

15 Schedule the trial

Use when: Use to fix trial logistics without ten messages.

> Write a trial-scheduling message for a bride. Include: two proposed trial dates and times, where it happens (studio or her home), how long it takes, what she should bring (her outfit photo, jewellery, reference pictures, clean skin), what the trial fee is and whether it is adjusted against the package, and that the final look is decided together after the trial. Under 100 words, friendly and organised.

Studio tip: Ask her to bring the outfit photo and jewellery to the trial. A trial without them is a look you will end up redoing on the wedding day.

16 Advance and date-block message

Use when: Use the moment she says yes, before the date slips away.

> Write a booking confirmation message covering: the confirmed date, the agreed package and total price, the advance amount ([%] of total) and that it is non-refundable, the payment methods ([UPI / bank transfer]), the balance due date ([before the event day / on the wedding morning]), and what happens next. Add one line that the date is blocked only once the advance is received. Under 110 words, clear and warm.

Studio tip: Take the advance the same day she confirms. A "yes" without an advance is not a booking - it is a maybe.

17 Outstation and destination quote

Use when: Use when the wedding is outside your city.

> Build an outstation quote for this wedding: [city, number of functions, number of days, people needing makeup]. Show a clear breakdown of: my service fee, travel (flights or train for me and [number] assistants), hotel stay for [nights], local transport, and a per-day crew allowance. State plainly what the client arranges (flights, stay) versus what I arrange and bill. Give the total and the advance. Present as a simple table with a one-line summary.

Studio tip: Quote travel and stay as separate line items, never hidden inside the makeup fee. It protects you when plans change and looks more professional.

18 Plain-English booking terms

Use when: Use to send a bride the rules in a form she will actually read.

> Write my booking terms in plain, friendly English - no legal jargon. Cover: the advance and that it is non-refundable, the balance due date, what happens if she reschedules (allowed once, subject to availability, [notice period]), what happens if she cancels, travel and stay terms for outstation weddings, that family makeup is billed per face, that photos may be used on my Instagram only with her written permission, and how to reach me. Keep each point to one or two lines.

Studio tip: Plain English terms prevent most disputes. If a bride cannot understand your contract, it will not protect either of you.

19 The booking confirmation she screenshots

Use when: Use once the advance is in your account.

> Write a warm booking-confirmation message for a bride whose advance I have received. It should: confirm the booking with the date and package, list what is included and excluded, give the balance amount and due date, list the trial date if booked, and tell her the three things she should do next (share outfit photos, note skin allergies, send the family makeup list). End with one line that makes her feel looked after. Under 130 words.

Studio tip: This message is the one brides screenshot and keep. Make it complete enough that she never has to ask you what is included.

20 Pre-wedding countdown messages

Use when: Use to stay in touch in the weeks before the wedding without being a nuisance.

> Write four short messages to send to a booked bride at [30 days], [14 days], [7 days] and [2 days] before her wedding. Each should have a clear purpose: 30 days - confirm the trial and skin-prep basics; 14 days - confirm the final look plan and family list; 7 days - confirm timings, venue and who will receive me; 2 days - confirm the morning plan, ready-by time and a calming line. Under 60 words each, warm, no selling.

Studio tip: These four messages do more for your reviews than anything else. Brides remember the artist who felt organised when they were stressed.

PART 3

Bridal Look Design & Mood Boards

A look is designed, not improvised. These 10 prompts help you plan the look, match it to skin tone and outfit, build mood boards the bride can approve, and preview looks with image tools - so there are no surprises on the wedding morning.

21 The look concept note

Use when: Use after the trial or the first consultation, to put the plan in writing.

> Write a bridal look concept note for this bride: [skin tone and undertone, outfit colour and fabric, function type, her references, her comfort level, her concerns]. Cover: the finish I recommend (dewy, matte, HD, airbrush), the base and shade-matching approach, the eye look, the lip, blush and contour direction, hair and drape styling, and the products or textures that suit her skin. Keep it to about 200 words, written so the bride can read and approve it.

Studio tip: Get a written "yes" on the concept before the wedding week. It turns "I imagined something else" into a conversation you already had.

22 Skin tone and undertone matching

Use when: Use when you are choosing base shades, or when a bride worries about looking ashy or grey in photos.

> Create a shade-matching checklist for an Indian bride with [skin tone description] and [warm/cool/neutral] undertone, whose outfit is [colour]. Explain: how to find undertone in Indian daylight, which foundation and concealer directions usually flatter that undertone, which colours to avoid because they grey out, how to handle two-tone skin (oily T-zone, drier jaw), and the setting technique that keeps the base from oxidising. Give this as clear guidance a working artist can follow. Do not invent specific product shade names - leave a placeholder for me to fill.

Studio tip: Never let the assistant name specific products or shades - that is the one thing you must decide yourself, on her skin, in person.

23 Match the look to the outfit

Use when: Use once you know her lehenga or saree colours.

> My bride is wearing [outfit colour and fabric] with [jewellery metal and stones] for [function]. Recommend a makeup direction that complements the outfit rather than competing with it. Cover: whether to keep the eye or the lip as the hero, which undertones in eyeshadow will lift the outfit colour, how to handle a heavily embroidered or heavily jewelled outfit, how to keep the look from turning muddy in flash photography, and one alternative direction if she wants a bolder look. Explain each choice in one line.

Studio tip: On a red or gold bridal outfit, let the outfit be the loudest thing. Makeup that fights the lehenga photographs as clutter.

24 Per-function looks for the same bride

Use when: Use for a multi-event wedding so every function looks different but connected.

> Plan five connected looks for one bride across mehendi, haldi, sangeet, wedding and reception. For each function give: the finish and intensity, the eye direction, the lip, the hair, and one sentence on why it fits that event and time of day. The looks must escalate logically from lightest to heaviest and share a consistent colour family so her album looks like one story. Keep each function to about 60 words.

Studio tip: Show this plan to the bride before the wedding week. Most brides have never seen their five looks side by side - it sells the multi-event package by itself.

25 Jewellery and dupatta planning

Use when: Use when a bride's jewellery or dupatta is heavy and you need to plan around it.

> My bride's jewellery for [function] is [description - maang tikka, nath, passa, heavy necklace, choker] and her dupatta/drape is [style]. Advise on: where the makeup should stay lighter so the jewellery reads, how to set makeup under a heavy maang tikka or nath without it slipping, how to handle the hair around a passa or heavy earrings, how to pin the dupatta without disturbing the makeup, and the touch-up plan once the jewellery is on. Keep it practical and short.

Studio tip: Do the base before the jewellery and the lips after. Pinning a dupatta over a finished lip is how the lip ends up on the fabric.

26 Mood board prompt for image tools

Use when: Use with an AI image tool or in Canva to build a mood board for the bride.

> Write an image-generation prompt for a bridal makeup mood board for a bride with [skin tone], [face shape], wearing [outfit colour], for a [function] look in [style - soft glam / traditional / editorial]. The prompt should describe a clean, well-lit close-up portrait, natural skin texture, realistic South Asian features, no heavy filter look, neutral background, so it reads as a reference for a real bridal look and not as a fantasy image. Give one main prompt and two variations.

Studio tip: Tell the bride these are reference images, not promises. AI previews are for choosing a direction - your hands, her face and real products make the final look.

27 Region-specific bridal styles

Use when: Use when a bride wants a look rooted in her community's tradition.

> Describe the typical bridal makeup direction for [South Indian / Bengali / Punjabi / Maharashtrian / Gujarati / Muslim / Sikh / Christian / North-Eastern] weddings, covering: the classic finish, the eye and brow style, the lip, the hair and drape, the jewellery it is built around, and the modern 2026-27 update to that tradition. Then write two lines on what to check with the bride so I do not assume her family's tradition. Keep it factual and respectful.

Studio tip: Ask, do not assume. Two families in the same community can want very different looks - the bride's own reference photos always win.

28 Mature skin and mother-of-the-bride looks

Use when: Use for mothers, aunts and older family members who want to look like themselves.

> Plan a flattering makeup direction for [mature skin / mother-of-the-bride] at [function], age [range]. Cover: skin prep for dry or textured skin, the base that avoids settling into fine lines, how to lift the eyes without glitter or heavy shimmer, the blush and lip direction that adds warmth without looking loud, brow filling for thinning brows, and a shorter, calmer routine because she will be busy. Give it in under 200 words.

Studio tip: Mothers are the most under-served clients in the room and the loudest referrers afterwards. Plan their look as carefully as the bride's.

29 Photoshoot and editorial looks

Use when: Use for pre-wedding shoots, maternity, brand work or editorial jobs.

> Plan a photoshoot makeup look for: [pre-wedding shoot / maternity shoot / brand campaign / editorial] with this brief: [setting, lighting, outfit, mood]. Cover: base and finish for the lighting, how the look changes for strobe versus natural light, the eye and lip intensity for the shoot's mood, touch-up points across a long shoot day, and how to keep the look consistent across multiple setups. Add one line on the look's limits - what it is not suitable for.

Studio tip: Pre-wedding shoot makeup is priced differently from bridal - it is shorter but often outdoor and long. Quote it on hours, not on the bridal rate.

30 The look-preview session with the bride

Use when: Use when a bride cannot decide between two directions.

> Write a short plan for a look-preview session where a bride is choosing between [look A] and [look B]. Include: what to prepare before she arrives, how to show both directions quickly (half-face comparison or two quick trials), the questions to ask that help her choose, how to photograph both looks in daylight and with flash for her to compare, and how to record the final choice in writing. Under 180 words.

Studio tip: A half-face comparison - one look on each side, same lighting - ends indecision faster than any conversation.

PART 4

Pricing, Packages & Negotiation

Most artists copy the rate of whoever trained them and stay wrong for years. These 10 prompts help you price from real costs, build packages that sell, quote GST correctly, and hold your price when someone pushes.

31 Cost your work from the bottom up

Use when: Use when you last changed your prices more than a year ago, or you are not sure you are making money.

> Help me calculate the true cost of one bridal booking. Ask me for: my per-face product cost, my kit restocking cost per month, the total hours a booking really takes (consultation, trial, travel, setup, application, touch-up), my monthly business overheads (travel, assistants, marketing, kit depreciation), and my target monthly income. Then build a simple costing sheet that turns those numbers into a minimum price per booking, and show the gap between that and what I currently charge. Present as a table with a plain-English summary.

Studio tip: Track your product cost across ten real faces before you argue about it. Almost every artist guesses this number low.

32 Set your day value

Use when: Use to set a price that survives the lean off-season months.

> Explain, in simple steps, how to set a bridal day rate from my target annual income. My numbers: target annual gross Rs. [amount], realistic peak-season working days [number], off-season working days [number], average bookings I can physically do in a peak day [number]. Walk me through the arithmetic, show how a rate based only on peak-season months collapses in the off-season, and give me a single recommended day rate with the working shown.

Studio tip: Your peak rate has to carry the quiet months. Price for the year, not for December.

33 Build a three-tier package

Use when: Use to give brides a real choice instead of one number.

> Build a three-tier bridal makeup package for my studio: Essential, Signature and Luxe. For each tier give: what functions and people are covered, the finish (HD or airbrush), whether hair and draping are included, trial inclusion, travel within [km], number of assistants, and the price. Make the middle tier the obvious best value. Add one line on what is not included in any tier, so there are no assumptions.

Studio tip: Three tiers turn "yes or no" into "which one". Most brides pick the middle - design it to be the one you want to sell.

34 Price the multi-event bundle

Use when: Use when a bride is booking only the wedding day and you know she will need more.

> A bride wants only the wedding-day look, but her wedding has [functions]. Show her, in a short message, what a bundled multi-function package would cost versus paying per function, with the saving stated as a clear rupee figure and a percentage. Explain honestly that bundling also guarantees the same artist and the same look consistency across functions. Under 120 words, no pressure.

Studio tip: Show the per-function price next to the bundle. The saving does the selling - you only have to present it.

35 Family and per-face pricing

Use when: Use when a bride asks for "just a little makeup for mummy and my sisters".

> Write a clear per-face pricing message for family makeup at [function]. Give the per-face rate for [light party makeup / full family makeup], state the minimum number of faces for which the rate applies, note whether lashes and hair are included, and explain that family makeup on the wedding day must be scheduled around the bride's timeline. Under 100 words. No discounting unless the number of faces crosses [threshold].

Studio tip: Family makeup adds up fast and is easy to undercharge. Give it a real rate and a real slot in the timeline.

36 GST-correct quote notes

Use when: Use on every quote once your turnover crosses the registration threshold.

> Write the GST and tax note for my bridal makeup quotes. My situation: [registered / not registered], annual turnover [amount], [intra-state / inter-state] clients. The note must state: the GST rate on beauty and personal care services under Group 99972 (SAC 999721 / 999722 / 999729), whether my price is inclusive or exclusive of GST, the registration threshold, and how retail products I sell are taxed separately. Add a line telling clients to confirm with their accountant. Keep it to six short lines.

Studio tip: Say inclusive or exclusive on every quote. Ambiguity here is the most common billing argument in this trade.

37 The discount pushback

Use when: Use when a bride asks for a discount without a reason.

> A bride has asked me to reduce my package price by [amount]. Write a reply that: holds my price, explains briefly and confidently what the price covers, offers one non-price concession instead (an extra touch-up hour, a second trial, or a small add-on), and leaves the decision with her. Warm, never defensive, never apologetic. Under 90 words. Do not offer a percentage discount unless I explicitly allow it.

Studio tip: Protect the price, give something of lower cost and higher perceived value. Once you discount once, that bride tells three friends your real price.

38 "Another artist quoted less"

Use when: Use the moment a bride compares you to a cheaper artist.

> A bride says another artist quoted [amount] less for the same wedding. Write a reply that: does not criticise the other artist, explains in 3-4 lines the difference that matters (trial, hair, draping, lashes, premium products, assistants, punctuality, the number of faces covered), asks one question that reveals whether the two quotes really cover the same thing, and leaves her free to choose. Confident, respectful, under 100 words.

Studio tip: Most "cheaper" quotes cover less. Your job is not to win the argument, it is to make the comparison honest.

39 Off-season offer

Use when: Use in the quiet months to fill the diary without cheapening your peak rate.

> Write an off-season offer for [months] that protects my peak-season pricing. It should: frame the discount as limited to off-season dates only, state the exact offer (a set saving or a bundled add-on like a free party look), give a clear end date, and state that peak-season dates are excluded. Under 90 words. Add a note on how to present it in an Instagram story and a WhatsApp broadcast.

Studio tip: Never discount peak dates. Discounting the quiet months is how you turn dead weeks into income without training brides to wait for a sale.

40 The price-increase announcement

Use when: Use when you raise your rates and your existing clients and followers need to hear it from you.

> Write a price-increase announcement for my Instagram and a WhatsApp note for past clients. It should: state the new pricing takes effect from [date], thank clients honestly, explain the reason in one line (higher product costs, more demand, a bigger team, more training), confirm that all already-confirmed bookings keep their old price, and invite new enquiries for the season. Warm and confident, under 120 words.

Studio tip: Honour every booking already confirmed at the old price. That one line is what makes a price rise feel fair instead of greedy.

PART 5

Proposals, Contracts & Payments

A proposal that looks professional gets read; a contract in plain English prevents arguments; a payment system that runs itself protects your cash flow. These 10 prompts build the paperwork side of a serious bridal studio.

41 The proposal skeleton

Use when: Use every time you send a bride a package after the consultation.

> Build a one-page bridal proposal template with these sections: a warm two-line opening addressed to the bride, the event summary (date, city, venue, functions), the recommended package and what it includes, a simple inclusions and exclusions list, the price with GST treatment stated, the payment schedule, what happens next, and my contact details. Keep the language simple, respectful and free of jargon. Leave clear placeholders for her details.

Studio tip: Send a PDF, not a WhatsApp wall of text. A proposal a bride can forward to her mother gets decided faster.

42 The package PDF copy

Use when: Use to write the words that go inside your package PDF.

> Write the content for my bridal package PDF: a short welcome note, a paragraph on my approach, the three package tiers with what each includes, the add-on price list (hair, draping, lashes, family faces, touch-up artist, outstation travel), the booking process in four steps, the payment and advance policy in two lines, and a closing note. Tone: warm, premium, simple English. No invented prices - use [placeholder] where a number is needed.

Studio tip: Send the package PDF the moment a bride asks about price. It answers the question and raises your perceived value at the same time.

43 Contract in plain English

Use when: Use for every booking above a set value, so both sides know the rules.

> Draft a bridal makeup service agreement in plain English, no legal jargon. Sections: parties and event details; scope of services per function; the agreed price and payment schedule; the advance and its non-refundable nature; rescheduling and cancellation terms; travel, stay and outstation terms; family makeup terms; punctuality and the bride's ready-by time; hygiene and patch-test notes; a photo and video consent clause; a limitation note; and a signature block. Keep every clause to one or two sentences.

Studio tip: Ask a lawyer to review it once, then reuse it forever. A one-page agreement you actually send beats a ten-page one you never do.

44 Inclusions and exclusions list

Use when: Use on every quote - this is the single most useful page you will ever send.

> Create an inclusions and exclusions list for a bridal makeup booking. Inclusions: [list what your package covers]. Exclusions: [list what is charged extra]. Write it as two clean columns in plain English, with a one-line note under each. Add three extra lines that most artists forget - for example whether assistant artists, touch-up support through the event, jewellery setting, or changing the agreed look on the day are included. Be specific about numbers and durations.

Studio tip: The bride who knows exactly what is extra almost never argues on the wedding day. This page protects your margin and your mood.

45 Advance and balance policy

Use when: Use to set a payment policy you will actually enforce.

> Write my advance and balance policy in plain English. Cover: the advance percentage and that it is non-refundable and blocks the date, the accepted payment methods ([UPI / bank transfer]), the balance due date (before the event day, not after), what happens if the balance is late, whether travel and stay for outstation bookings are payable in advance, and how receipts are issued. Keep it to six short lines and make it easy to paste into a quote.

Studio tip: Collect the balance before the event day, not after. Budgets evaporate the day after a wedding.

46 Reschedule and cancellation clause

Use when: Use to handle the most common cause of disputes in wedding work.

> Write a reschedule and cancellation clause for a bridal booking. Cover: one free reschedule allowed with [notice] and subject to availability; a second reschedule treated as a new booking; what happens to the advance if she cancels; what happens if the date moves into peak season; what happens if I have to cancel for a genuine emergency and how I would help her find a replacement artist; and a force-majeure line. Plain English, eight short lines maximum.

Studio tip: Say what you will do if you ever have to cancel. Brides trust an artist who has thought about it more than one who promises it will never happen.

47 Travel and stay terms

Use when: Use for any wedding outside your city.

> Write travel and stay terms for outstation and destination weddings. Cover: who books and pays for flights or train tickets for me and my assistants, the class or fare class, hotel standard and who pays, local transport, a per-day crew allowance, the number of nights covered, what happens if the wedding dates shift, and the notice I need to book travel. Plain English, one line per point.

Studio tip: Get travel booked early in peak season or your profit disappears into last-minute airfares.

Use when: Use before you ever post a bride's photo - this is both a courtesy and a legal safeguard.

> Write a short, friendly photo and video consent clause for my bridal contract. It should: ask permission clearly, explain exactly where the photos may be used (Instagram, my website, portfolio, marketing), confirm the bride can choose to be tagged or remain unnamed, state that she can withdraw permission later in writing, and confirm I will never post an unflattering or private image. Under 120 words, warm, no legalese.

Studio tip: Ask for consent at booking, not on the wedding day. Brides say yes far more often when they are not standing in a rush with a veil on.

49 Invoice copy

Use when: Use for the advance, the balance and every add-on.

> Write the copy for my bridal makeup invoice. Include: a header with my studio name and contact, an invoice number format, the bride's name and event date, a line-item table (package, add-ons, travel, family faces, taxes if registered), the advance already paid, the balance due, the due date, the payment methods, and a short thank-you line. Add a note on the GST line and whether it is included or extra. Plain English, professional.

Studio tip: One clean invoice per booking, numbered and saved. It is the first thing you will need if there is ever a payment dispute.

50 Payment reminder sequence

Use when: Use when an advance or balance is overdue and you do not want to sound rude.

> Write a three-message payment reminder sequence for an overdue balance. Message one ([3 days before due]) - a friendly heads-up with the amount and due date. Message two ([on the due date]) - a clear, polite request with the payment link and methods. Message three ([3 days after]) - a firm but respectful note stating the consequence (the date cannot be held further, or services cannot be confirmed). Under 60 words each, no anger, no threats beyond the stated policy.

Studio tip: Set the sequence up once and send it on time every time. Reminders feel rude only when they are inconsistent.

PART 6

Wedding-Day Ops & Communication

On the wedding morning, everything runs on timing and calm. These 10 prompts help you plan the day minute by minute, brief your team, handle delays, and keep the bride steady - the difference between a booking and a five-star review.

51 The wedding-morning timeline

Use when: Use the night before every wedding.

> Build a minute-by-minute wedding-morning timeline. Details: ready-by time [time], number of faces [number], functions and venue [details], travel time between locations [minutes], my team size [number]. Work backwards from the ready-by time, assign each person a slot and an artist, add 15 minutes of buffer per face, and mark the exact time the bride's base must be finished so her outfit can be worn without smudging. Present as a simple table.

Studio tip: Work backwards from her ready-by time, always. Artists who plan forwards run late; artists who plan backwards have buffer.

52 Family and bridesmaid schedule

Use when: Use when there are six or more faces on the day.

> Write a family and bridesmaid makeup schedule for [number] people across [functions]. Assign each person a slot and an artist, put the bride's own makeup in the middle of the schedule rather than at the end, note who needs hair and who needs draping, and flag the two people who will inevitably be late so I can slot them in the buffer. Include a one-line message I can send the family group so everyone knows their time.

Studio tip: Do the bride in the middle, not last. If everything slips, the bride is still ready on time - that is the only deadline that matters.

53 The touch-up kit checklist

Use when: Use to pack your kit the night before.

> Create a bridal touch-up kit checklist covering: blotting papers, a pressed powder for shine, lipstick and liner, concealer, lash glue, cotton buds, tissues, setting spray, safety pins, jewellery-setting pins, dupatta pins, hair pins, a mini steamer or garment tape if relevant, sanitising wipes, hand sanitiser, and a small mirror. Add a short note on which items belong in a separate "leave with the bride" pouch, and what to keep with me for touch-ups during the event.

Studio tip: Leave a small pouch with the bride's sister or best friend, not with the bride. She will be holding a dupatta, not a lipstick.

54 Contingency plan for delays

Use when: Use when the timeline is already tight and something will go wrong.

> Write a contingency plan for a wedding morning where [the bride is running late / the venue changed / a family member demanded makeup at the last minute / the power went out / my assistant did not arrive]. For each scenario give: the immediate action in the first two minutes, what to cut or compress without hurting the bride's look, who communicates what to whom, and the one line I say to the bride to keep her calm. Practical, no theory.

Studio tip: Decide your cut list in advance: what gets simplified first when time runs out. Deciding in the moment is how looks get ruined.

55 Assistant and team briefing

Use when: Use before every wedding with assistants.

> Write a pre-wedding briefing note for my assistants. Include: the timeline and each person's assigned faces, the bride's look brief and the exact products to use, hygiene rules (sanitising between faces, no double-dipping, clean brushes), how to set up the station, what to do if a client is unhappy, when to escalate to me, dress code and behaviour with the family, and where to keep the shared kit. One page, plain English, checkable.

Studio tip: Brief the team the day before, in writing. Repeating it on the morning costs you the buffer you built.

56 Vendor coordination message

Use when: Use when you need to sync with the photographer, planner or decorator.

> Write a coordination message to send the wedding photographer and planner before the event. It should: introduce me and my role, share the bride's ready-by time and the photography slot, ask for their key shot list for the getting-ready and the bridal reveal, confirm the best-lit spot for the reveal photos, and agree on a touch-up window before the ceremony. Under 120 words, professional and collaborative.

Studio tip: Message the photographer before the wedding, not on the day. A photographer who knows your ready-by time will shoot around you, not through you.

57 On-site etiquette and behaviour

Use when: Use as a reminder sheet for you and your team at family homes and venues.

> Write a short on-site etiquette guide for a bridal makeup team working in Indian family homes and venues. Cover: greeting and respecting elders, not entering private rooms uninvited, keeping the kit area tidy, managing requests from guests politely, not eating or drinking at the makeup station, handling pets and children, phone use, and how to decline extra makeup requests without offending anyone. Under 200 words, respectful and practical.

Studio tip: A polite, tidy team gets re-booked for the bride's cousins. Etiquette is marketing you do not have to pay for.

58 The "bride is nervous" script

Use when: Use when the bride is anxious, crying or overwhelmed.

> Write a set of calm, warm phrases I can say to a nervous bride during her makeup - covering: when she is worried the look is too heavy, when she is comparing herself to Instagram brides, when she is anxious about timing, when family is stressing her, and when she cries and ruins her base. Give me the exact words for each moment. Short, human, no cliches, no fake reassurance. Under 150 words total.

Studio tip: A calm bride's skin behaves better and her photos look better. Managing her mood is part of the job, not a distraction from it.

59 Hygiene and patch-test talking points

Use when: Use to answer a bride or mother who asks about hygiene and skin safety.

> Write a short, confident explanation of my hygiene and safety practice that I can give a bride or her mother. Cover: sanitising brushes and tools between clients, single-use disposables (wands, sponges, lashes where relevant), clean hands and no double-dipping, a patch test before the trial for anyone with sensitive skin or known allergies, asking about allergies and skin conditions before the trial, and what I do if a client reacts. Under 180 words, reassuring and factual.

Studio tip: Volunteer this without being asked. Hygiene confidence is one of the fastest ways to justify a premium price.

60 Post-event debrief

Use when: Use the day after a wedding, while it is fresh.

> Write a debrief template for the day after a wedding. Capture: what ran on time and what did not, which products or techniques held up over a long day in heat and humidity, what the bride said about the look, which family members asked for my number, what I would change next time, and any cost that went over (travel, assistants, products). End with one action for the next wedding. Keep it to a short, honest page.

Studio tip: One honest page after every wedding turns a season of chaos into a system you can repeat and price higher.

PART 7

Instagram & Content Engine

Instagram is the shop window; WhatsApp is the counter. Brides research 5-10 artists, watch your reels and read your captions before they message. These 12 prompts run a content engine you can sustain even in peak season.

61 The four-line bio that converts

Use when: Use now - this is the highest-return ten minutes in this pack.

> Write four Instagram bio lines for a [city] bridal makeup artist whose speciality is [HD / airbrush / South Indian bridal / soft glam] with [number] brides done and [awards or features if any]. Line 1: what I do and who I serve. Line 2: where I work and travel to. Line 3: proof or differentiator. Line 4: one clear call to action pointing to WhatsApp. Give three versions at different tones, each under 150 characters, plus a matching "link in bio" suggestion.

Studio tip: A bride decides in under five seconds whether to message you. Put your city and your speciality in the first line - she is searching for exactly those words.

62 Content pillars for a bridal artist

Use when: Use to stop posting randomly and start posting with a plan.

> Define six Instagram content pillars for a bridal makeup artist in India. For each pillar give: what it is, why it works for a bridal audience, two example post ideas, and how often to post it. Pillars should cover real bridal work, transformation reels, education, behind the scenes, client reactions and personal trust-building. Add one line on the pillar that should get the most posts and why.

Studio tip: For every three portfolio posts, post one that answers a bride's fear or question. Portfolio gets likes; answers get enquiries.

63 The 30-day content calendar

Use when: Use on the first of every month.

> Build a 30-day Instagram calendar for a bridal makeup artist for [month], which is [peak / ramp-up / off] season. For each day give the post type (reel, carousel, story, photo), the topic in one line, and the hook for the first three seconds or first line. Include at least 8 reels, 6 carousels, 4 educational posts and 4 story series. Build in two rest days and batch-capture days. Present as a simple table.

Studio tip: Batch your content in the quiet weeks and release it in the busy ones. You cannot film a reel while a bride is in your chair.

64 The bridal transformation reel script

Use when: Use for your single most important content format.

> Write a 45-60 second bridal transformation reel script. Structure: first three seconds show the finished look (hook), then cut back to the bare face and skin prep, then quick cuts of base, eyes and lips, then the full reveal from multiple angles, then one line of voiceover about what the bride wanted to feel, then the call to action "Comment BRIDAL for my packages and availability". Include the on-screen text for each section and a caption.

Studio tip: Show the finished face in the first three seconds. If the reveal comes last, most viewers never reach it.

65 Before/after carousel

Use when: Use to get saves - carousels keep people on the post longer.

> Write an 8-slide before/after carousel for a bridal look. Slide 1: the finished look with a hook line. Slides 2-3: the bare face and skin prep. Slides 4-5: base and eyes in progress. Slide 6: the full look in daylight. Slide 7: the same look in flash, showing how it photographs. Slide 8: a call to action inviting a comment or DM. Give the on-screen text for each slide and a keyword-rich caption naming the city and the look style.

Studio tip: Always show one frame in flash. Brides worry about how makeup photographs, not just how it looks in the mirror.

66 Get-the-look tutorial

Use when: Use when a trending look or celebrity look is in the news.

> Write a 30-second "get the look" tutorial script recreating [celebrity or trending look]. Cover: the hook line naming the look, the three or four key steps with the product type (not a paid promotion), one technique tip that makes it look professional, and the close with a call to action. Add on-screen text for each step and a caption that includes the look name, my city and the words "bridal" and "makeup". Keep it accurate - describe only techniques I can genuinely teach.

Studio tip: Tutorials get shared by other artists and saved by brides. Both grow you - one for reach, one for bookings.

67 Behind-the-scenes reel

Use when: Use to show brides what the morning with you actually feels like.

> Write a 60-second behind-the-scenes reel script for a wedding morning. Structure: the 5 am kit setup, the calm controlled chaos of a family getting ready, one honest moment of problem-solving, the bride's final reveal, and the emotional close. Write the voiceover lines, the on-screen text and a caption that ends with a booking call to action. Keep the tone warm and real, not staged.

Studio tip: Brides buy the morning-of experience as much as the look. BTS content is what makes a bride feel safe booking you.

68 Client-reaction video caption

Use when: Use for the single most powerful piece of marketing you can make.

> Write three caption options for a client-reaction video where the bride sees herself in the mirror for the first time. Each caption should: name the moment honestly, include the bride's own words if she agreed to share them, add one line of context about what she asked for, and end with a soft call to action. Always add a line confirming the bride's permission to post. Under 100 words each.

Studio tip: Get consent at booking and tag the bride. Her friends and family are your next three bookings.

69 Local hashtag and keyword bank

Use when: Use on every post - local keywords beat generic ones.

> Build a hashtag and keyword bank for a bridal makeup artist in [city]. Give: three broad bridal tags, four city-specific tags, two style tags ([HD / airbrush / soft glam / South Indian bridal]), two function tags (bridal, engagement, reception), and two vendor-community tags. Then write a list of 12 keyword phrases brides actually search (like "[city] bridal makeup artist" and "airbrush makeup for [community] wedding") to weave naturally into captions, alt text and on-screen text.

Studio tip: Instagram now works like a search engine. "[City] bridal makeup" in your caption will out-reach #makeupartist every single time.

70 SEO captions and alt text

Use when: Use to make every post findable, not just pretty.

> Write a caption and an alt-text description for this bridal photo: [describe the look, outfit, city, function]. The caption must include the city name, the look style, the function and one natural keyword phrase, while still reading like a human wrote it. The alt text must describe the image accurately for someone who cannot see it, in under 125 characters, including the city and the look style. Give both, plus one line on why alt text matters for reach.

Studio tip: Alt text is crawled by Instagram and read by screen readers. Ten extra seconds per post, permanent discoverability.

71 Vendor collab post

Use when: Use to reach a photographer's or planner's audience for free.

> Write an Instagram Collab post plan with a [photographer / wedding planner / mehendi artist / outfit designer]. Include: the idea for the post, the caption written to work on both accounts, the credit lines, how to tag the bride and the venue with permission, and a short message I send the vendor proposing the collab and explaining what each side gets. Keep the proposal message under 100 words.

Studio tip: Collab posts appear on both feeds. One good collab reaches an audience that already trusts the vendor recommending you.

72 Pinned post and story highlights

Use when: Use so a bride landing on your profile can book herself.

> Write the copy for my pinned post and my Instagram story highlights. Pinned post: a short "work with me" post explaining who I am, my speciality, my city, my packages starting range, and how to enquire - under 150 words. Highlights: names and one-line purpose for five highlights (Bridal Work, Client Reviews, Packages, About Me, Availability). Add one line on what the first story of the "Availability" highlight should say in season.

Studio tip: A bride will check your highlights before she DMs you. Make the Packages and Reviews highlights do the selling for you.

PART 8

Reviews, Referrals & Repeat Business

Your last bride is your cheapest source of the next one. These 8 prompts turn one wedding into reviews, referrals, vendor partners and repeat work across every function and every friend group.

73 The review ask

Use when: Use within 48 hours of a wedding, while she is still emotional about the look.

> Write a message asking a bride for a Google review, sent [2 days] after her wedding. It should: thank her warmly, mention one specific detail from her wedding (the look, the function, her reaction), explain in one line why the review matters to a small business, give her the direct Google review link, and offer to send three prompts she can use if she does not know what to write. Under 90 words.

Studio tip: Ask within 48 hours. Two weeks later she is back in real life and the emotion - which is what makes a good review - has faded.

74 Review replies that sell

Use when: Use on every Google and WedMeGood review.

> Write reply templates for three kinds of reviews: a glowing five-star review, a mixed review that is happy with the makeup but mentions a timing issue, and a critical review. Each reply should: thank the reviewer by name, respond to the specific point, never argue, show a future bride reading it that I am professional and reasonable, and keep it under 90 words. For the critical review, include one line offering to talk it through privately.

Studio tip: Future brides read your replies more carefully than your reviews. A calm reply to a bad review wins more trust than ten five-star ones.

75 The referral programme

Use when: Use to turn happy brides and vendor friends into a steady lead source.

> Design a referral programme for my bridal makeup studio. Include: who can refer (past brides, photographers, planners, mehendi artists, outfit designers, salon owners), what they get (a thank-you amount, a free service, or a discount on their next booking), when they get it (only after the referred booking is confirmed and paid), how the referral is tracked, and the message I send to announce it. State the exact reward as [placeholder] so I can set the number.

Studio tip: Pay the referral after the booking is confirmed and paid, never on the enquiry. Otherwise you will pay for leads that never book.

76 Vendor tie-up outreach

Use when: Use to build a small circle of vendors who recommend you.

> Write a warm outreach message to a [wedding photographer / planner / mehendi artist / outfit designer] in my city proposing a working relationship. It should: introduce me briefly, explain why our clients overlap, offer something first (a styled shoot, a portfolio credit, or a discounted trial for their referred brides), suggest a short call or coffee, and end without pressure. Under 130 words. Add a follow-up message to send if there is no reply in a week.

Studio tip: Offer first. Vendors respond to artists who bring them something - a shoot, a bride, or a shoutout - not to artists who ask for leads.

77 Past-bride revival

Use when: Use in the quiet weeks, especially before a new season.

> Write a re-engagement message for brides I served in previous seasons. It should: remind her warmly who I am and which function I did, ask how married life is going, offer something genuinely useful (a party-makeup booking, a referral discount for a friend's wedding, or an anniversary/reception look), and give one clear next step. Under 90 words. Add a note on how to segment these past brides so the message feels personal.

Studio tip: A past bride has three or four friends getting married in the next two years. Staying warm with her is cheaper than any ad.

78 Anniversary and occasion offer

Use when: Use to create bookings in months with no weddings.

> Write an offer targeting past brides for non-wedding occasions: anniversaries, baby showers, maternity shoots, festivals, family functions and corporate events. Include: the offer, the price band, the booking window, and one line on why these bookings are easier (shorter, local, no multi-day pressure). Under 100 words, warm, with a soft call to action and no hard selling.

Studio tip: Off-season income rarely comes from weddings. It comes from the same brides, a year later, for a different reason.

79 Wedding guest to client conversion

Use when: Use after a wedding where you did family or guest makeup.

> Write a follow-up message to a family member or wedding guest whose makeup I did at a wedding. It should: thank her, mention the specific function and look, offer to do her own next event, and include one easy next step (a WhatsApp number, a party-makeup starting price, or an availability check). Under 70 words, friendly and light. Add one line on when to send it - the day after the wedding, not a week later.

Studio tip: Guests who saw your work up close are the warmest leads in the room. Message them the next morning, before the wedding glow wears off.

80 Festive and party-season campaign

Use when: Use before Diwali, Navratri, Karva Chauth, New Year or the party season.

> Plan a festive and party-season campaign for [festival / season]. Include: the offer (a party-makeup package, a group booking rate for friends, or a limited number of slots), the dates the offer runs, the content plan (three reels, two carousels, daily stories), the WhatsApp broadcast message, and the booking and payment terms. Present as a short campaign plan with the exact copy for the WhatsApp broadcast.

Studio tip: Group bookings - four friends together - fill a slow day in one message. Price the group rate so it is worth your time.

PART 9

Studio Business & Money

The makeup is the easy part. These 10 prompts run the business behind it: your numbers, your kit, your calendar, your team, your off-season income and the brand deals worth chasing.

81 Monthly profit and loss

Use when: Use on the first Sunday of every month.

> Build a simple monthly profit and loss template for a bridal makeup artist. Revenue lines: bridal bookings, family faces, trials, party/occasion work, lessons, brand work. Cost lines: products and restocking, kit depreciation, travel, assistants and their pay, marketing and ads, software subscriptions, studio rent if any, phone and data, and taxes. Show gross, net and net margin, and add a short note on the one number I should watch most. Present as a table with a filled example.

Studio tip: Do this once a month, honestly. Most artists who feel busy but broke discover the reason here in ten minutes.

82 Kit restocking and cost tracking

Use when: Use to stop kit costs quietly eating your profit.

> Create a kit cost-tracking system for a bridal makeup artist. Include: a per-face product cost tracker (what one full bridal face actually consumes in foundation, concealer, powder, lashes and disposables), a monthly restocking list with a budget, a rule for when to replace a product rather than stretch it, a note on hygiene-driven replacements, and a simple formula that turns per-face cost into a line in my pricing. Present as a tracker table with an example row.

Studio tip: Track ten real faces before you set your price. The number will surprise you, and it is the strongest argument for raising your rate.

83 Booking calendar and capacity

Use when: Use at the start of every season to plan how many bookings you can genuinely take.

> Help me plan my season capacity. My numbers: peak-season weekends [number], average bookings I can do in a day [number], bookings that need a full day [number], days I must keep free [number]. Work out my realistic maximum bookings for the season, the point at which I must add an assistant or a second artist, and the bookings I should decline or refer. Present the arithmetic clearly and end with a one-line capacity rule I can apply to every enquiry.

Studio tip: Know your ceiling before the season starts. The artist who says yes to everything in December lets the bride down in December.

84 Hiring an assistant or junior artist

Use when: Use when you are turning away work or running late on every wedding.

> Write a hiring brief for my first assistant or junior bridal artist. Include: the role and what they will and will not do, the skills they must already have, the training I will give, how I will pay them (per event, per day, or monthly), the trial-and-shadowing period, the hygiene and behaviour expectations, and a simple agreement I can use with them. Also give three interview questions that reveal whether someone is reliable and calm under pressure.

Studio tip: Hire for calm and punctuality before skill. A technically brilliant artist who panics at a 5 am wedding is a liability, not an asset.

85 Add a lessons or academy income line

Use when: Use to earn in the quiet months from your own skill.

> Design a makeup lessons or mini-academy offering for my studio. Include: who it is for (beginners, brides who want to do their own makeup, working artists wanting to level up), the format (one-to-one, small group, online), what each covers, the price band for each format, how many students I can take, what they take away, and how I market it in the off-season. Present as a short plan with a one-line description of each offering.

Studio tip: Teaching fills the months weddings do not, and it makes you the artist other artists recommend.

86 Brand collaboration pitch

Use when: Use when you want paid brand work instead of free product.

> Write a pitch email to a cosmetics or skincare brand proposing a paid collaboration. Include: who I am and my audience and engagement honestly stated, what I propose (a bridal-focused campaign, a tutorial series, a shade-matching reel), what the brand gets, what I need from them (product, brief, timeline, usage rights), my rate or rate range, and a clear next step. Keep it under 200 words, confident, no overclaiming of follower numbers.

Studio tip: Pitch a specific campaign, not "let's collaborate". Brands pay for a plan, not for enthusiasm.

87 Google Business Profile setup

Use when: Use to capture "bridal makeup artist near me" searches - the highest-intent traffic you can get for free.

> Write the content for my Google Business Profile. Include: a business name that follows Google's rules, a category and secondary categories, a 750-character description with my city, speciality and services, the services list, five photo categories I should upload, the questions I should pre-answer in the Q&A;, and three review-request prompts. Add one line on the single most important profile field for a local bridal artist and why.

Studio tip: Google Business Profile is the highest-return free channel you have. Complete it properly once and it works for years.

88 Off-season income plan

Use when: Use in the lean months, before the panic sets in.

> Build an off-season income plan for [months]. Include: the services I can sell then (party makeup, pre-wedding and maternity shoots, lessons, bridal makeup for destination weddings abroad, brand work, portfolio shoots, festive campaigns), the realistic income each could add, the marketing each needs, and a week-by-week plan for the quiet period. Present as a short plan with a monthly income target and the actions that reach it.

Studio tip: Off-season is content-production and skill-upgrading time. Artists who use it come back into season a full step ahead.

89 Yearly marketing plan

Use when: Use once a year to stop reacting and start planning.

> Build a 12-month marketing plan for a bridal makeup studio in India. Map the bridal calendar (peak October to March, second peak around April-May, off-season June to September) and give, for each quarter: the content focus, the offers, the vendor outreach, the paid ads decision, and the review and referral push. Include a one-page budget split and the three numbers I should track each month. Present as a simple quarter-by-quarter table.

Studio tip: Plan your marketing around the bridal calendar, not the calendar month. Brides start researching months before the season.

90 The monthly business review

Use when: Use to run your studio like a business, not a hobby.

> Create a 30-minute monthly business review checklist for my studio. Cover: revenue versus target, bookings confirmed for the next [3 months], enquiries and my enquiry-to-booking conversion rate, average booking value, my best-performing content, my kit spend, hours worked versus income, one thing to stop doing, and one thing to start. Add a short set of questions to answer honestly and a place to write next month's single biggest priority.

Studio tip: Thirty minutes a month. It is the cheapest thing you will ever do for your income.

PART 10

Client Care & Difficult Conversations

One awkward conversation handled badly can cost you a referral chain; handled well, it earns you a loyal client and a review. These 10 prompts give you the words for the hardest moments in bridal work.

91 The unhappy client

Use when: Use when a client says she is not happy with the result.

> A client has said she is not happy with [the look / the longevity / the photographs]. Write a calm, respectful reply that: thanks her for telling me, asks exactly what she is unhappy with without sounding defensive, offers a concrete remedy within my policy (a touch-up, a corrected look for a shoot, or a partial adjustment), and states clearly what I cannot do. Never blame the client or the products. Under 120 words, warm and professional.

Studio tip: Listen first, fix second, defend never. Most unhappy clients want to be heard, not compensated.

92 Makeup melting or fading complaint

Use when: Use when a bride says the makeup did not last the day.

> Write a reply to a bride who says her makeup melted, faded or creased during a long, hot, humid wedding day. It should: acknowledge how disappointing that is, ask two specific diagnostic questions (which parts faded, at what time, and what the conditions were), explain the honest factors that affect longevity (skin type, humidity, setting, touch-ups, tears, outdoor ceremonies), offer one practical remedy, and add one line on what I would do differently next time. Under 130 words.

Studio tip: Log the conditions of every wedding - heat, humidity, indoor or outdoor. Over a season you will learn exactly what your work survives.

93 The refund request

Use when: Use when a client asks for money back.

> A client is asking for a refund of [amount] for [reason]. Write a reply that: acknowledges her request seriously, restates my written policy in plain English, distinguishes between a genuine service failure (which I will fix or partly compensate) and a change of mind (which the policy does not cover), offers a specific remedy if I am at fault, and keeps the door open. Firm, kind, no anger, no over-apologising. Under 150 words.

Studio tip: Put the policy in writing at booking so this conversation has a reference. Arguments about unwritten rules are always the worst ones.

94 Bride cancelling the wedding

Use when: Use when a booking falls through - for any reason.

> Write a reply to a bride who is cancelling her booking [number of days] before the wedding. It should: respond with genuine kindness first, explain what happens to the advance under my policy, ask if she would like to hold the advance against a future date if the policy allows it, and offer one practical help (a referral to another artist, or a booking for a different occasion). Under 100 words. Warm, human, no lecture about policy.

Studio tip: Handle a cancellation with grace and she will remember it for years - and send you her sister's wedding.

95 Late payment before the event

Use when: Use when the balance has not arrived and the wedding is close.

> Write a firm but respectful message for a bride whose balance is overdue and whose wedding is in [number] days. It should: state the outstanding amount and the due date, remind her that services on the day cannot proceed until the balance is settled as per the agreement, offer to make payment easy (UPI link, a reminder of the methods), and keep the tone calm and non-accusatory. Under 90 words. Add one line on what to do if she does not respond within 24 hours.

Studio tip: Say it early and plainly. A payment conversation two weeks out is awkward; two hours out it is a crisis.

Use when: Use when a bride or her family objects to a photo being posted.

> Write a reply for when a bride or a family member asks me to remove a photo I posted. It should: remove the photo first and confirm it immediately, thank them for telling me, apologise briefly for the oversight, ask whether she wants it removed only from one platform or everywhere, and confirm that no photo will ever be posted again without written permission. Under 90 words, no defensiveness, no asking her to reconsider.

Studio tip: Take it down first, discuss after. Asking a family to justify their objection turns a five-minute fix into a lasting grudge.

97 Family interference

Use when: Use when a relative tries to direct the bride's look or your work.

> A family member at the wedding is insisting the bride's look be changed [too heavy / too light / a different style]. Write a reply that: respects the elder or relative, redirects the decision to the bride politely, explains that the look was agreed with the bride at the trial, offers one small adjustment if it can be done without spoiling the agreed look, and keeps everyone calm. Give the exact words, under 100 words, respectful Hinglish-friendly.

Studio tip: Agree the look with the bride in writing at the trial. It gives you a polite, factual answer in the middle of family opinions.

98 Allergy or skin reaction

Use when: Use if a client reports a reaction after a trial or the event.

> Write a careful, responsible reply to a client who says she had a skin reaction after her makeup. It should: take it seriously, ask which product areas reacted and when, advise her to see a doctor if it is significant, offer to remove the product from my kit and adjust my patch-test process, and avoid diagnosing or minimising. Add a line on what I will record in my client notes. Under 130 words. Do not claim medical knowledge.

Studio tip: Never diagnose and never dismiss. Offer to adjust, keep a record, and let a doctor handle the medical side.

99 Asking for the balance politely after the event

Use when: Use when the balance was not taken before the event and now it is awkward.

> Write a friendly message asking a client to settle a balance after her event. It should: congratulate her warmly first, mention the specific booking and the amount outstanding, give the payment methods, and make it easy (a payment link), and keep it to three short paragraphs maximum. Under 90 words. No guilt, no irritation, no mention of "I already reminded you".

Studio tip: Best practice is to collect before the event. If it happens after, keep it light - a warm nudge recovers far more money than a cold one.

100 The handover thank-you and testimonial

Use when: Use the day after the wedding, to close the loop and open the next one.

> Write a warm thank-you message to send a bride the day after her wedding. It should: thank her for trusting me with her big day, mention one specific moment or look, wish her well for married life, tell her how to reach me for future occasions, and include one soft ask - a Google review, or permission to share her photos. Under 100 words. Genuine, not templated-sounding.

Studio tip: This message does three jobs at once: it closes the booking, earns the review and plants the next booking. Send it every time.

The Master Context Block

Paste this at the top of a new chat before you use any prompt in this pack. It gives the assistant your context once, so every prompt after it comes back sounding like you and not like a generic AI.

The Master Context Block

You are my studio assistant for a bridal makeup business in India.

ABOUT ME: My name is [name]. I am a bridal makeup artist based in [city], working across [state/region]. My speciality is [HD / airbrush / soft glam / South Indian bridal / etc.]. I have done about [number] brides. My Instagram is [handle] and my WhatsApp is [number].

MY SERVICES AND PRICES: [list your services and starting prices, e.g. Bridal wedding-day look from Rs. X; multi-event package from Rs. Y; party makeup from Rs. Z; family faces Rs. N per face; trial Rs. T].

MY POLICIES: Advance is [%] and non-refundable. Balance is due [when]. Reschedule: [your rule]. Outstation: [your travel and stay terms]. GST: [registered or not, inclusive or exclusive].

MY TONE: Warm, professional, simple English, occasionally Hinglish with Indian clients. Never salesy, never apologetic about my price, never over-promising.

HARD RULES: Never invent a price, a policy, a product name, a statistic or a client quote. If you need information you do not have, write [PLACEHOLDER] and tell me what to fill in. Never make claims about results or guarantees. Keep everything short enough to send on WhatsApp.

The five habits that make every prompt work

- Give context, not commands. “Write a reply to a bride who asked my price for a December wedding in Jaipur and is comparing three artists” beats “write a message” every time.
- Put the facts in brackets. Date, city, function, budget, number of faces, outfit colour - the more real detail you paste in, the less the assistant has to guess.
- Ask for options, not one answer. “Give me three versions - warm, short and formal” lets you choose the one that sounds like you.
- Always ask it to edit in your voice. End the prompt with “then rewrite it the way an Indian makeup artist would text a bride - short, warm, no corporate language.”
- Never let it invent. If the output contains a price, a policy, a product or a statistic you did not give it, delete that line. Appendix F is the checklist for this.

The one rule that protects you

AI is excellent at structure, speed and the blank page. It is useless at knowing what you charge, what your contract says, or what your bride's skin needs. Use it to draft, to plan, to write the first version - then apply your own judgement before anything reaches a client. That division of labour is the whole system.

Appendix B

Why Now - the 2026-27 Wedding Market & Season

This is the section that tells you whether the season ahead is worth preparing for. Every figure below is from published sources checked in October 2026. Treat them as the shape of the market, not as promises - and re-check the ones you plan to quote.

The market you are selling into

What	Figure	Source
India wedding services market	USD 103.93 bn (2024), about USD 117.45 bn (2025), projected USD 228.69 bn by 2030 - a 14.3% CAGR	Grand View Research
Weddings per year in India	8 to 10 million	Confederation of All India Traders
Late-2025 season	46 lakh weddings between 1 Nov and 14 Dec 2025, about Rs. 6.5 lakh crore of related spend (2024: 48 lakh weddings, Rs. 5.9 lakh crore)	CAIT
Vendors per wedding	About 10 - photographers most booked (79%), bridal makeup artists second (73%)	WeddingWire India 2024 report
Global makeup-artist services	USD 7.6 bn in 2025, heading to USD 12.84 bn by 2034 (6% CAGR). Asia-Pacific is 37% of it and grows fastest at 7.3%	Dataintelo, Oct 2026 revision
Bridal share of that market	Bridal makeup is the largest service type at 36% of value	Dataintelo

The pattern behind the numbers matters more than the numbers. India held fewer weddings in 2025 than 2024, yet total spend rose - families are spending more per ceremony, not marrying more often. That is good news for an artist who prices properly and delivers a premium experience, and bad news for one competing on being the cheapest.

The 2026-27 season calendar

The wedding season reopens after Dev Uthani Ekadashi on 20 November 2026, with the first vivah muhurat the next day. Chaturmas runs to 20 November; Kharmas pauses the calendar from mid-December to Makar Sankranti. Dates shift slightly by city, and families confirm the final lagna with their own purohit - so treat this as your planning calendar, not a promise.

Period	What it means for you
Now to 20 Nov 2026	Chaturmas. No weddings. This is your content-production and lead-nurture window - the brides booking December are already messaging.
21 Nov - 12 Dec 2026	Season opens. The tightest, highest-demand stretch of the year. Expect early-morning muhurats.
13 Dec 2026 - 14 Jan 2027	Kharmas pause. Few or no weddings. Use it for lessons, edits, kit restocking and next-season content.

Period	What it means for you
15 Jan - Feb 2027	Second and strongest wave. February 2027 carries about 13 muhurat days - one of the busiest months of the whole cycle.
Mar - Apr 2027	A shorter window before the next solar-month pause, then it reopens mid-April.
May - Jun 2027	The quiet stretch. Off-season income: party looks, pre-wedding shoots, lessons, brand work.

What this means for your season

- Peak-season rates are the industry norm. Published guides put peak-season pricing 20-40% above off-season - if you are not charging more for a December Saturday, you are the only one.
- Multi-function weddings are the real money. Indian ceremonies run three to five events with separate looks. An artist who books only the wedding day leaves three-quarters of the booking on the table.
- Your reply speed is your close rate. Brides message several artists at once. The first clear, professional reply usually wins.
- Brides research online before they ever message. Instagram, Google and reviews are the shortlist - not the word of mouth alone that used to decide it.

Appendix C

GST & Pricing Quick Reference

This is the reference most artists get wrong, because a lot of advice online is still quoting the old rate. Beauty and personal care services changed on 22 September 2025 under the GST rate rationalisation. Check the current position on the CBIC portal before you invoice, and confirm with your accountant.

Service / item	SAC / HSN	GST rate	ITC
Hairdressing, barber, salon and beauty services	999721 (Group 99972)	5%	No ITC
Bridal and party makeup, cosmetic treatment, manicure, pedicure	999722	5%	No ITC
Other beauty and well-being services	999729	5%	No ITC
Spa, massage and physical well-being	999723	5%	No ITC
Retail cosmetics sold by you (make-up)	HSN 3304 / 3307	18%	ITC available
Shampoo, hair oil, soap, toothpaste	HSN 3305 / 3401 / 3306	5%	As applicable

The three things to get right

- The rate is 5% without input tax credit. The old 18% with ITC was replaced on 22 September 2025. Because ITC is no longer available on services, the GST you pay on rent, products and equipment becomes a cost you price into your fee.
- Registration is mandatory once turnover crosses Rs. 20 lakh a year (Rs. 10 lakh in special-category states). Below that you must not charge GST.
- Small salons and studios can opt for the composition scheme - 6% paid from your own pocket, no GST on the bill, no ITC, quarterly CMP-08.
- Retail products are a separate supply. If you sell cosmetics, invoice them on their own line at their own HSN rate - make-up is 18%, most daily-use items are 5%.
- Say inclusive or exclusive on every quote. This one line prevents more billing arguments than any contract clause.

Note on sourcing: published guides differ on this rate. Some still show 18% from before the September 2025 change. The position above reflects the notification as amended with effect from 22 September 2025 - verify it yourself on the CBIC GST rates page before you print it on an invoice.

Appendix D

WhatsApp & Instagram Costs - What Changed on 1 October 2026

If you use the WhatsApp Business Platform - through a provider or directly - your cost model changed on 1 October 2026. Replies you send inside the 24-hour customer service window are no longer free. Here are Meta's India list rates, checked October 2026.

Message type	India rate (per delivered message)
Marketing (offers, announcements, reminders to return)	Rs. 0.8631
Utility (order or booking updates, receipts)	Rs. 0.115
Authentication (OTPs)	Rs. 0.115
Service (your reply while the customer's chat is open)	Rs. 0.115 after the first 1,000 free each month per number
Authentication-international	Rs. 2.4971

What this means for a bridal artist

- Every business phone number gets 1,000 free service messages a month, then Rs. 0.115 each. For most solo artists this allowance covers normal enquiry traffic - know your number before you panic.
- Marketing messages cost about 7.5 times a utility message. Do not send a discount offer in a message that should have been a booking reminder - a promotional line turns a utility template into a marketing one.
- Short, complete replies save real money. Each message is charged, so one good reply beats three chatty ones.
- If a provider bills you, ask what they charge on top of Meta's rate. Published provider markups of 20-30% are common.
- India billing in rupees: businesses billed from India must move their WhatsApp accounts to INR by 31 December 2026. From 1 January 2027, Meta says it will stop delivering messages from accounts still billed in another currency. If you use a provider, ask whether your account has been moved.

Instagram itself costs nothing to post. For most artists it remains the highest-return channel: brides search Instagram directly for “[city] bridal makeup artist”, and your bio, captions, hashtags and alt text decide whether you appear. Part 7 of this pack is built around that.

The AI Tool Stack - India Prices, October 2026

You do not need all of this. One good assistant plus a design tool will do more for your studio than five subscriptions you never open. Prices below are the providers' published India list prices checked in October 2026 - confirm at checkout, because they change.

Tool	India price	What it earns its place for
ChatGPT Go	Rs. 399/month	The cheapest paid assistant. Enough for replies, captions and planning if you use it daily.
ChatGPT Plus	Rs. 1,999/month	Better reasoning, image tools and file handling. Worth it if you use AI every working day.
Google AI Plus	Rs. 399/month	Gemini in a low-cost tier with storage. Jio users have had free Google AI Pro offers - check your eligibility first.
Google AI Pro	Rs. 1,950/month	Gemini across Gmail and Docs plus 5 TB storage.
Claude Pro	Rs. 1,999-2,399/month (India listing)	Strong for long documents, careful writing and contracts. Billed on the web in dollars for some users.
Canva Pro	Rs. 500/month or Rs. 4,000/year; Rs. 69 for a one-day pass; Rs. 199 for a week	Reels covers, package PDFs, price lists, story templates, carousels. The day and week passes are the smart route for occasional jobs.
AI image and retouch tools	Free tiers to about Rs. 1,100+/month	Background clean-up and portrait polish for portfolio posts. Keep previews realistic - never let AI edit a bride's face in a way her real photos will not match.

How to choose without wasting money

- Start free. Every major assistant has a free tier. Use it for two weeks on real client messages before you pay for anything.
- Buy the cheapest plan that matches your real usage. For most solo artists that is ChatGPT Go or Google AI Plus at Rs. 399, plus Canva Pro.
- If you only need Canva for a few days, buy a day or week pass rather than a month.
- Cancel anything you have not opened in three weeks. Subscriptions you do not use are the quietest leak in a studio's profit.
- Do not paste a bride's personal details, photographs or contract into a free AI tool without checking its data policy. When in doubt, remove the identifying details first.

Appendix F

The Verification Checklist & 30-Day Ramp-Up Plan

Run this before any AI draft reaches a client

- Prices: every figure is one you set yourself. Delete any number the AI produced.
- Policies: advance, balance, reschedule, cancellation and travel terms match your actual written policy.
- Products and brands: no invented product names or shade numbers. You name the products.
- Statistics and claims: no “guaranteed results”, no invented market numbers, no fake awards or features.
- Client details: correct name, correct date, correct city, correct function. One wrong date is a ruined booking.
- Photos and consent: you have written permission for every client image you post.
- Tax lines: rate, inclusive or exclusive, and the registration position are correct for your business.
- Voice: read it out loud. If you would not say it that way to a bride, rewrite it.

The 30-day season ramp-up plan

Day	One action

29	Build your off-season income plan with Prompt 88.
30	Run the monthly business review from Prompt 90 and set next month's one priority.

The one-page cheat sheet

- Reply within an hour. First clear reply usually wins the booking.
- Ask date, city, functions and people before you quote anything.
- State your starting price without apologising.
- Take the advance the same day, or the date is not booked.
- Send a PDF proposal, not a wall of text.
- Agree the look in writing at the trial.
- Plan the wedding morning backwards from her ready-by time.
- Do the bride in the middle of the family schedule, never last.
- Post three portfolio pieces for every one post that answers a bride's fear.
- Ask for the review within 48 hours, and pay referrals only after the booking is paid.
- Track your product cost across ten real faces before you argue about your price.
- Never let AI invent a price, a policy or a product. That is always yours.
